PASSENGERS SAVED IN THRILLING RESCUES FROM WRECKED LINER CITY OF ROCKLAND

In the picture at the left are Mrs. C. P. Small of South Weymouth and her son, H. T. Small, who lost all their belongings and had to borrow blankets for protection and money to take them home. In the centre picture is Thelma Barbour of No. 1038 Boylston street, who was returning from her vacation with her family. The next picture shows one of the choir boys of St. Peter's Church, Ralph Hersey, of Dorchester, who saved a pet rabbit. The picture on the extreme right of is of Sigrid Bonj of Beverly, who floated fifteen minutes in the water before she was rescued.

Thrilling Stories of Peril and Rescue Told by Rockland's Passengers

CAPTAIN H. C. CALHOUN of the collier Wm. Chisholm:

We left Boston last evening at 6 o'clock, bound for Portland. There was a thick fog. We were proceeding along cautiously about twenty-five miles north of Thatcher's Island when the City of Rockland struck us, tearing a big hole in her bow. We were damaged but slightly and above the water.

At the time all hands were on deck on the Chisholm, I being in the pilot-house. The first intimation I had of the proximity of the Rockland was when I heard her whistle. Then I saw her lights. I thought she had plenty of room to pass. Suddenly the Rockland turned and came directly at us. I saw her red light and put down my wheel hard to starboard. But the Chisholm is heavily laden and she did not respond promptly—not in time to prevent the collision.

We stood by and took aboard about 500 passengers including some of the crew. Some of the boats of the Rockland had been lowered and we took aboard the passengers from these. Some of the baggage was also transferred. We then took the Rockland in tow. About 4:30 the Belfast hove in sight and we lay to while the passengers were transferred to that boat. This took about an hour.

MISS ADA BENTLEY of Arlington street, Newton:

I was knocked from the City of Rockland by a man on the steamer.

I almost lost my life. I do not know who the man was. I was about to get into one of the lifeboats when he jumped over at me and hurled me into the water so that he could get my seat. I floated until my screams brought me assistance. I was pulled back aboard the steamer.

That man acted like a cowardly brute. He tried to save his life at the expense of mine.

THEODORE WEDDLETON of No. 42 School street, Everett:

It was about midnight when I was awakened by the noise of the crash, said Mr. Weddleton. I put on all the clothes I could and went on deck at once. No one seemed to understand just what the matter was. I turned to with the crew and helped get out the lifeboats.

The men were courageous as could be—men passengers and members of the crew working together. The order was, "Women and children first."

Captain's Gig Capsizes.

The next boat to get away was the captain's gig. I was in her. As soon as we struck the water we capsized. My leg was badly wrenched, but I managed to keep afloat for half an hour. I succeeded in swimming over to the coal barge and members of her crew took me aboard. Later I was put on the Belfast and came to Boston with the other passengers.

WILLIAM M. GUSTIN, New England manager for Turner Halsey Company of No. 150 Lincoln street, Boston:

I was awakened by a terrific crash about midnight, or some minutes after. I was thrown out of bed and shot sprawling on the floor.

My first thought was that we had struck a rock. On looking out of my window I saw a huge steel collier looming up. I could hear the grating of the bow of the collier deep into the bow of the steamer. Of course you know the steamer is a wooden vessel.

Struck Below Water-Line.

I did not have to leave the room to realize the steamer was sinking. The crash had struck her from below the water-line up to the deck. The whole bow was literally torn away. When I looked from my window, I could see the sparks flashing where the steel had ground against iron work in the steamer's bow.

Almost all the passengers had rushed on deck about the time I did. There were about 350 of them in all, mostly women and children. When they knew the steamer was sinking they rushed to where the life-preservers were and put them on.

There was no panic. Most of the passengers seemed calm, so far as I could tell. But the officers and men of the steamer did not seem to be in evidence at all.

Boat Load Thrown in Water.

The men passengers themselves had to start to man the lifeboats and lower them away. In the first boat were sixteen or eighteen people, not more than that. The passengers at the davits of course were inexperienced. They let the boat down so that one end dipped the water. All the passengers in the boat were

WRECKED STEAMER MAY BE BEACHED

The following dispatch was received at the Portsmouth Navy Yard this afternoon:

The steamer City of Rockland was met off Eastern Point in tow of the Collier William Chisolm and two tugs. They were towing her stern first and making good progress, with the intentions of beaching her at Deer Island if necessary. The bulkheads are holding well and the sea is smooth. There is a bad list to starboard and her bow is well carried away. The collision seems to have been severe. Her captain and some of the crew are still on board, but in no danger. The lifeboat is being towed alongside in case of emergency.

The steamer City of Rockland of the Eastern Steamship Company on her way to Boston from Gardiner and Bath, Me., with 500 passengers and crew aboard, collided shortly after midnight this morning, fifteen miles off Thatcher's Island, with the steel steamer collier William Chisholm. The steamboat's starboard bow was laid open to the waterline, the breach measuring six to eight feet in width.

All the passengers of the steamer, most of whom were women and children, were reported saved. Less than half of them were put into lifeboats. Those with the rest that remained on the City of Rockland were transferred to the collier. Five hours after the crash, the passengers were transferred to the steamer City of Belfast, on which they were brought to Boston.

Lifeboats Fill With Water.

Three lifeboats filled with water, and their occupants were thrown into the sea. They were rescued with life buoys and ropes, some remaining in the water for half an hour or more.

As soon as all the passengers had been rescued, the City of Rockland, listing to starboard and with Captain Blair and members of the crew on board, was towed, stern-on, by the collier Chisholm and three tugs toward Gloucester harbor. Officials of the Eastern Steamship Company declared an official statement of the collision would not be given out until they had talked with Captain Blair.

The steamboat City of Rockland was off the Graves light at the entrance of Boston harbor early this afternoon and may be beached at Deer Island.

Though the collision and the moments that followed it were marked by the greatest excitement, the passengers have nothing but praise for the crew of the Rockland. The order was given "Women and children first." "Not a man," declared a passenger, "made an effort to save himself until it was plain all the women and children had been rescued."

Neither the City of Rockland nor the collier Chisholm was equipped with wireless. Until the Belfast stood by about 3 o'clock this morning the only signals for help were those made with the whistles. Wireless would have brought assistance to the scene within an hour. Those on the vessels considered it fortunate that the Belfast heard the whistle signals of distress.

SEEKS FRESNO PERJURY BOND

Attorney William R. Scharton electrified spectators at the Russell sitting in East Cambridge today when he made formal demands upon Master G. A. A. Percy to have Fresno Flats placed under bonds on the charge of perjury. Attorney Scharton argued that there was a reasonable presumption that the claimant from California had perjured himself in his testimony and in justice to his client he felt that he ought to make this request, it being a court of record.

Asked for his authority, Attorney Scharton quoted sections 3 and 5 of chapter 210 of the revised laws, giving authority to a court of record to commit or place under sureties any witness who verbally or in

CHICAGO TROLLEYMEN UPON STRIKE VERGE

CHICAGO, July 30.—Demands of 10,000 street railway men for increased wages and improved working conditions have been formally refused by Chicago Railways and Chicago City Railways companies. Both companies offered to renew the old agreement which expires Wednesday night for a term of years. The men will consider the question in mass meeting tomorrow night and are expected to reject the proposition.

JOHN C. SHERMAN FOSS' SECRETARY

John C. Sherman, who has been known as the chief of experts during the regime of Governor Foss, was today appointed private secretary to Governor Foss. He succeeds Dudley Holman, who has been the Governor's secretary since he took office. Mr. Sherman is in the publishing business and has an office at No. 6 Beacon street. He is forty years old.

GRAND JURYMEN SEIZE BOOKS AND PAPERS FROM "L"

Several filing cabinets, containing papers and documents of the "L" claim department were seized today by Police Lieutenant John J. Rooney, attached to the district attorney's office at the Milk street office of the Elevated.

This was done on the order of the Grand Jury and District Attorney Pelletier. The contents of the cases were taken to the grand jury room for examination in the Elevated strike probe.

Lieutenant Rooney was armed with a "duces tecum" process which gave him the authority to take the cabinets and contents. He was accompanied by "Andy" Howard, the jury investigator of the Elevated.

Hichbon Superintendent Tripp of the Elevated was called before the grand jury today and questioned regarding discharges of union men.

Eight men occupying high positions were involved in the case by the confessions of Jack Rose, Louis Webber and Harry Vallon, according to reports current about Mr. Whitman's office.

Further confessions are expected in connection with the murder of Rosenthal and the arrest of Becker, which, it is thought, will lay bare the most remarkable system of graft this city ever knew.

New York shuddered today when it realized Becker, master of the most powerful squad of the police force, and a directing hand in the body of what had become known as "the finest," was actually in the Tombs, charged with murder in the first degree.

The three men who confessed—driven to the wall and seeing nothing before them but the electric chair, or at best, prison bars—spent all night under guard in the criminal courts building.

This trembling trio are Jack Rose, the bald-headed partner of Becker; "Bridgy" Webber, the man with the bank roll, and Harry Vallon, the soft-voiced gambler.

These men were guarded through the

BELIEVE SNODGRASS GIRL KILLED HERSELF

CATSKILL, N. Y., July 30.—The police today said that they believed that Miss Dorcas L. Snodgrass, whose body was found in a creek here yesterday, killed herself by jumping from a Hudson River boat. An inquest was held last night. Dr. J. F. Rooney of Albany afterwards declared that he had found no signs of violence. He will examine the stomach and intestines for signs of poison in his laboratory at Albany. The members of her family persist in the belief that she was poisoned and her body taken to where it was found.

PLEDGES DEMOCRATS TO TWO BATTLESHIPS

WASHINGTON, July 30.—Representative Sulzer of New York, who is circulating a petition in favor of two battleships among the Democratic members of the House, today announced he had obtained the signatures of twenty-one Democrats who will vote for two battleships regardless of the action of the caucus. Sulzer says he expects to have twenty-eight or thirty Democrats pledged to two ships before Saturday.

GAYNOR ORDERS POLICE INQUIRY

NEW YORK, July 30.—Mayor Gaynor today announced that he would call a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen to begin an investigation of the police department. Police Commissioner Waldo was with the Mayor when the announcement was made.

Panic reigned in the police department this afternoon when it became known that several high officials had been named to District Attorney Whitman as participants in the graft system that resulted in the assassination of Herman Rosenthal and the indictment of Lieutenant Charles A. Becker.

Eight men occupying high positions were involved in the case by the confessions of Jack Rose, Louis Webber and Harry Vallon, according to reports current about Mr. Whitman's office.

missing. Her husband was at the offices of the Eastern Steamship Company today making frantic inquiries for his wife. The officials of the company could give him no information.

Statement by Vice-President.

Vice-President F. A. Jones of the Eastern Steamship Company today gave out the following statement, in the absence of President Calvin Austin, who is in New York:

This statement must necessarily be incomplete, as I have had no opportunity to converse with Captain Charles A. Blair or any officers of our steamer, the City of Rockland.

From what I can learn from other sources it seems that our steamer, the City of Rockland, with about three hundred passengers on board collided about midnight with the steam collier William Chisholm at a point between Boone Island and Thatcher's Island in a dense fog.

The bow of the City of Rockland was quite badly damaged and she leaked. The passengers were transferred in boats to the collier.

Passengers Brought to Boston.

Shortly before 2 o'clock this morning the steamer Belfast, from Bangor, arrived alongside the collier and the passengers were re-transferred on board that steamer and brought to Boston, arriving here shortly after 8 o'clock.

The collier then took the Rockland in tow and when last seen by the Belfast was apparently headed for Portsmouth, but they must have changed their course, because later we learned that she had passed Thatcher's Island on her way towards Gloucester.

I immediately sent three towboats and requested the cutter Gresham to go to her assistance as soon as I learned of the accident. It was only a short while ago that I learned from a wireless despatch that the vessel had changed her course.

The City of Rockland was valued at about $200,000. She had six lifeboats and six liferafts with a capacity of 523 people. She had on board about 300 passengers and 100 crew. The bow is of metal and in good condition and frequently inspected. Fire and boat drills are daily occurrences.

The almost disastrous attempt to launch one or two boats—one boat, I believe—was brought about by passengers attempting to handle the boat. This I have been told. Of course, I was not present and cannot personally say it was so.

The passengers' clothing and valuables, which are reported lost, are probably safe on board the ship and will be recovered.

There were a few slight injuries in the rush. I had Dr. T. J. McCarthy of East Boston here and he has reported to me that there were no serious injuries.

We sent people to their hotels and homes in taxicabs as fast as they arrived, except such as were being cared for by friends and did not care for our assistance.

Captain Blair has been in the service of the Eastern Steamship Company for a number of years and never had an accident. He is one of our most efficient commanders and was at one time in command of the Harvard.

One of the Rockland's boats was upset when being lowered. One end dropped as the davit ropes on the other end caught, spilling a score of persons overboard. Among them were Mrs. W. J. Thompson and her granddaughter, Dorothy Pocket, of Brookline. The little girl, though only ten years old, helped her grandmother to keep afloat and pleaded with the men in the lifeboat to save her grandmother, and "never mind her."

Thirty-one choir boys of St. Paul's Church, Boston, passengers on the Rockland, stood on the deck of the coal barge as the last lifeboat was lowered and sang a hymn of thanksgiving.

Many rescues were made by means of a gangplank reaching from the City of Rockland to the steam collier Chisholm.

According to passengers, three or four of the lifeboats of the City of Rockland filled with water after they were overboard, throwing as many as seventy-five passengers into the sea. All of these were saved, though several were hurt.

The City of Belfast, with her own and the passengers of the Rockland on board, arrived at the Eastern Steamship Company's pier at 8:40 o'clock.

All the passengers as they landed told stories of harrowing experiences. One man, Theodore Weddelton of Everett, had his leg wrenched and described the sinking of a lifeboat and of the captain's gig, the occupants of which were thrown into the water.

Sigrid Boal, a little girl, was thrown into the water from an upset boat. For fifteen minutes she struggled in the water, succeeding in keeping afloat. She was cared for when the Belfast, and when the steamer reached Boston was made comfortable in the office of the Eastern Steamship Company.

Rescued Under Difficulties.

The rescue of the passengers was accomplished with the greatest difficulty. Many were numbed from exposure and the chill of the water into which they were plunged from the capsizing boats.

Many of those in the staterooms escaped with nothing but the clothing they had on, leaving valuables and money.

Captain Eben W. Curtis of the Belfast stated upon his arrival here that the Rockland was so badly damaged it might be necessary to tow her into Salem or Marblehead instead of this port. "The ship is taking so much water forward that I question whether the craft can be towed to this city," said Captain Curtis. "I don't know anything about the collision other than what I have been told by the passengers I took off the collier. Shortly after 3 a. m. today we heard the shrill whistle of the collier off Thatcher's Island. The sea was calm and the fog had lifted. We steamed toward the collier and was surprised to see the passengers of the Rockland on the deck of the collier. After transferring the passengers to the Belfast we started for Boston."

Girl Floats 15 Minutes in Water.

Ten-year-old Sigrid Boal of Beverly was on the City of Rockland with her mother. The two were separated and did not meet again until both had landed at the Indian wharf pier.

"I left the steamer in a lifeboat," said little Miss Boal. "Five minutes after we were lowered, the lifeboat filled with water and sank. Fortunately my life preservers on and floated for fifteen minutes before another lifeboat rescued us. My mother had gotten into still another lifeboat, she told me when we landed in Boston.

"I was anxious about her because none could tell but what many had been or would be lost. My anxiety kept up until mother and I greeted one another on the wharf.

"I never felt happier in my life than I did when I saw her.

"I suffered a bit from the exposure. You see I did not have a chance to dress up much after we were awakened by the crash."

THRILLING STORIES OF RESCUE OF PASSENGERS

throwa into the sea, which seemed rough.

The men passengers worked bravely at the ropes. Most of them had their hands torn or blistered by contact with the sliding ropes.

The passengers thrown into the water from this boat were saved by means of lifebuoys and ropes. All of them, I think, were saved. Two other lifeboats capsized, but the occupants of these were also saved.

So far as I know, the boat was not equipped with wireless. The crew kept sending up distress signals. After a time, eight lifeboats had been lowered. The collier, which had not suffered as extensively as the City of Rockland, was soon able to pick up the lifeboats. Then the collier captain turned his attention to those who had remained on the steamer.

About 2:45 o'clock we were told the City of Belfast had answered our signal and had hove to. She did not come alongside until daylight, apparently in fear of another collision in the fog. By this time all the passengers had been transferred to the collier.

About 5 o'clock the City of Belfast came alongside and the passengers were then transferred to this steamboat.

I do not think the lifeboats were at all efficiently manned. I think most of the passengers will agree with me, particularly the men who helped their hands working the davits.

Woman Sleeps Through All.

There was one woman, whose name I did not get, who was found sleeping peacefully. So far as I know she was the only one not awakened by the crash. She was greatly surprised when they told her the steamer was sinking.

Hardly any of the passengers escaped with all their clothing. Most of them were in trousers and shirt, or night wear, and some had only blankets around their bodies.

One of the most affecting scenes was just after we got onto the collier. Here were thirty-one boys of St. Paul's Church. They were returning from their camp at Winthrop, Me. Two or three of their number had been thrown into the water when the first lifeboat sunk.

On the collier, after the word was passed that all were saved, the boys gathered in a group and struck up a hymn and sang it with great feeling.

Captain Remains on Board.

The captain and some of the crew remained aboard the steamer, refusing to be transferred to the collier.

We were treated finely on the Belfast. Those that were chilled were given clothing or blankets. Hot coffee and rolls were served, and those in need of it were given brandy and whisky. Fortunately there were two or three physicians there, one of them, Dr. McVey of Haverhill, attending to a number of the injured men.

Lax methods also prevailed when the Belfast docked at India Wharf just before 9 o'clock. There was no attempt to check off the passengers as they left the steamer. It would have shown if any passengers were missing. We hoped all were saved, but nobody can tell but now, perhaps. I could not be positive in stating that all were saved.

MRS. A. T. DECATUR of Malden:

I was on board with my daughter, Gertrude, and I saw a very brave act. It was that of little Dorothy Lockett, ten years old, of Brookline, who saved her grandmother from drowning. When the life boat was being lowered one end caught, and twenty persons were thrown into the water. Mrs. W. A. Thompson, the grandmother, was going down for the second time when the little girl, clinging to the boat, grasped her.

By that time the men in the boat had got it righted, though it was half full of water. Little Dorothy plunged with them to pull her grandmother aboard.

Save my grandmother! Never mind me!' she cried.

In spite of her appeals the little girl was taken into the boat first. The men were frantically bailing out the boat. Dorothy fell on her knees in the bottom and began to bail, crying: "I'll bail out the boat. You save my grandmother."

It was the most wonderful exhibition of courage I ever heard of, concluded Mrs. Decatur.

G. F. REDLON of Medford, with his wife and two children.

I was awakened shortly after mid night by the shock of a heavy collision. All the lights were out and I got on deck hurriedly. Many others were on deck and everything was great excitement.

Women were screaming. Men and women were rushing about the deck. Children were huddled close beside their parents and they were crying. The shouts of the officers giving orders could be heard above the screams of the passengers. The crew behaved beautifully. They lowered the boats quickly. I placed my wife and two children in one of the boats and hoped to the deck of the coal barge until the Belfast arrived.

MRS. R. E. HOLMES of No. 410 Pleasant street, Peabody:

Three of the thirty-one St. Paul's choir boys, with the Rev. Ralph Harper, who was returning with them from two weeks in Camp Lowell, Winthrop, Me., had a thrilling experience. The three boys and Mr. Harper were in one of the lifeboats which was upset. All three were thrown into the water, but the boys could swim, and with the assistance of the clergyman, kept afloat. The boys are Ralph Hersey of Dorchester, Raymond Lett of Hyde Park and Ralph Emerson of Medford.

Pet Rabbit Saved.

Hersey had a white rabbit which had been given to him at camp, and took his pet along when he ran to the lifeboat. Throughout the time in the water he clung to his animal, and when he reached the Chisholm still carried the rabbit, much bedraggled, but safe.

In Pitiable Plight.

MRS. C. P. SMALL of South Weymouth:

With my son I was placed safely in a lifeboat and transferred to the collier. Perfect discipline was maintained, and there was nothing for any woman to fear so long as time was given to man the lifeboats. The rule was "Women and children first."

No man tried to save himself at the expense of the women passengers.

I lost everything. All I had time to put on was a skirt, and my son got into a pair of trousers. Aboard the Belfast they lent us blankets to prevent our catching cold. A kind passenger gave me $2 with which to reach home.

BESSIE LADD, fourteen years, of No. 170 Bradstreet avenue, Beachmont:

When I saw that the lifeboat was sinking, I just started to jump into the water and swim. I could not see anything, and had no idea where I should land, but I knew how to swim and trusted to getting somewhere. At last I saw the side of the coal barge and called to the men to come and help me. Then when I found myself near the ladder, I caught hold and with the help of one of the crew climbed on deck.

FRANCES C. LADD, Bessie's older sister:

We were no sooner launched than a strong wave caught us and pushed the boat under the steamer, where a strong stream of water from some where above us poured down and in a few moments nearly filled our boat. Besides, it looked as though the boat leaked. In another moment we were all in the water and trying to catch hold of the bottom of the lifeboat, which had turned completely over.

I tried to hold onto the two girls, but saw that I only hindered them from swimming, so let them go and told them not to get excited, but to hold on wherever they could. There were eight or ten other people about us and all had lifepreservers. The crew on the collier were giants in lifting us out of the water, where we had become exhausted. On board we were given Jamaica ginger and wrapped in warm blankets.

RALPH W. BARTLETT, lawyer, of Newton:

With my family I was ordered into the boat. It was the second or third lowered, I think. The oars were tied in the boat and there were no oarlocks. When the boat struck the water it dipped and spilled everybody into the water. I was struck on the head with an oar. My wife was in the water twenty minutes before she was rescued.

ROOSEVELT AGAIN HURLS THEFT CHARGE

NASHVILLE, Tenn., July 30.—State Treasurer Taylor, head of the third party in Tennessee, has received a letter from Theodore Roosevelt taking a fall out of President Taft and Governor Hooper. The letter follows in part:

"I feel not say to you how heartily I hope you will nominate a progressive ticket composed of ex-Democrats and ex-Republicans. Governor Hooper, as I understand it, has indorsed the fraudulent Chicago convention, and will support its nominee. In my judgment no honest man, whether Republican or Democrat, can support Mr. Taft and claim any right to the suffrages of other honest men. Stealing is stealing, and to steal a nomination is as bad as to steal a purse."

MRS. VANDERBILT TO FIGHT TUTOR'S SUIT

NEWPORT, R. I., July 30.—When the suit of C. Attorney Mortimer Sullivan, who appeared in behalf of Grinnell, agreed to the continuance. Grinnell brought suit to recover $500 which he claims is due from Mrs. Vanderbilt for services rendered as a tutor to her son William. Burdick announced that Mrs. Vanderbilt intends to contest the suit.

GRACE'S MOTHER REHEARSES TALE

ATLANTA, July 30.—Eugene Grace's mother, Mrs. S. L. Hill, a soft-spoken, pleasant-faced woman, was the central figure in the trial of Mrs. Daisy Opie Grace for the shooting of her husband today.

Facing her wounded son, who lay on a stretcher in the courtroom, Mrs. Hill told a graphic story of Mrs. Grace's recital of the affair after the shooting. She declared that Mrs. Grace had said that if any one had shot Eugene it was J. C. Ruffin, his negro servant. Her husband, Mrs. Grace had said, had threatened to whip the negro within an inch of his life for beating his wife Martha, a maid in the Grace home. Mrs. Hill declared that Mrs. Grace told her of insurance which both she and her husband planned to take out.

It was for Eugene Grace's insurance that his wife attempted to kill him, according to the theory of the prosecution.

Hamilton Hill, half brother of the wounded man on the stand, told about Mrs. Grace offering him a pistol because it was "too heavy" for her to carry, the day after the shooting. The lad was decidedly antagonistic to the woman. The courtroom was again besieged by thousands.

Beauty—real beauty—is more than skin deep. No cosmetic in the world can give the wholesome color, the bright eyes, the clear, transparent skin that is the natural result of pure blood, proper diet and hygienic habits of daily life.

It sounds easy and it is easy for a woman to have the beauty which health alone can give. A safe and efficient tonic if the blood is weak, thin or impure (Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are especially recommended), the avoidance of foods which will cause eruptions, and regular bathing of the skin. That is all and it is the only way.

Write to the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Box 176, Schenectady, N. Y., for a free booklet, "Plain Talks to Women." It is an outspoken but perfectly proper little book and should be read by every woman and growing girl. A free sample of the new laxative "Pinkets" will also be sent you. Should you be unable to obtain Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People in your locality they will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50.

Dorothy Lockett, the Little Heroine of the Sea Disaster

This little girl won the praise of all in her insistence that her grandmother be saved. They were both thrown into the water from one of the lifeboats and Dorothy tried to aid her grandmother. Then when they were taken into the boat the little girl helped bail it, at the same time telling everybody to "look out for grandma."

By DOROTHY LOCKETT.

Grandma and I had been down in Maine, at West Southport, for a little vacation and we were on our way back to Boston. I live in New York, at No. 610 Riverside Drive, but papa is here. He is an official in the Taxi Service Company. Papa was going to meet us at the dock and I was just dressing about meeting him on the wharf when all of a sudden I heard a bump. I jumped out of my berth, and so did grandma. I put on a sweater of grandma's, and grandma put on a heavy coat. Then we put on life-savers and went up on the deck. As soon as we got out we were ordered to the upper deck.

Everybody was waiting to get in the boat. I stuck close by grandma and at last we got in a boat. Then all of a sudden something dreadful happened. One end of the boat seemed to stick. We tipped sideways and I fell into the water. My, but I was scared! I couldn't swim very much. When I was down to the beach I learned how to keep afloat and so was not as scared as I might have been if I couldn't swim.

I went in all over. My head went in and I got my hair wet.

I came right up to the surface because I had that lifesaver on, you know. First thing I did then was to look around for grandma. She was right near me and I grabbed her. Had to look out for grandma, you know. Even if I am only a little girl I can't let anything happen to her and couldn't go back to Boston without her, you know. I just had to save her.

There were a whole lot of people swimming about us. Pretty soon we got back in the boat. I told them to take in grandma, but they grabbed me first and pulled me in. I believed to them again to help grandma and, when I saw that she would be all right, I helped bail.

There was a big can in the bottom of the boat and I picked it up. I just bailed for dear life. I bailed and bailed and kept on bailing. Some of the people were pretty badly frightened, and I don't blame them.

It's enough to be frightened when you are sinking at sea and then get put in a boat and tipped out where you can't touch bottom.

The water was pretty cold. But then, I am used to going in bathing where the water is cold, you know, and so didn't mind it as much as I might have otherwise.

We were in the boat for some time and finally reached the coal boat. They gave us a stateroom and grandma and I were soon dry and feeling better.

Then, after we had been on the coal boat quite a while the Belfast came along and took us aboard. My, but I was glad when I found we were going to Boston. I knew papa would be waiting for me and knew he would be so worried when he heard of the crash.

ACCUSE BOSTON MEN OF PLOTS

A bill in equity brought today in the Supreme Court by the United Zinc companies of Maine, with mines in Joplin, Jasper, and Aurora, Missouri, charging many local trusts, street railways, mills and individuals, who were directors or associates, with conspiracy to control zinc, and to sell the stock at exorbitant prices, also with appropriating stock to themselves without paying the corporation for it, resulted in the issuing of an injunction by Judge Loring.

Judge Loring also granted special requests, attaching the real estate of several of the defendants. The injunction restrains them from parting with the stock they hold.

The respondents named in the bill are Sydney Harwood of Newton; Charles E. Riley of Newton, Edward E. Parker of Brookline, Albion E. Tuttle of Boston, Frederick R. Tillotson of Manchester; Sarah E. RUSH SHELTER FOR AMERICAN REFUGEES

WASHINGTON, July 30.—One thousand tents were rushed to El Paso, Texas, today by the War Department in an effort to provide suitable shelter for the American refugees who are pouring across the border from Northern Mexico. In addition the department will petition Congress to make immediately available the remainder of the Mississippi flood fund, about $100,000, for rations for the refugees. These measures were taken following the receipt of additional dispatches telling of the arrival of several hundred homeless Americans.

Prince Yoshihito Takes Oath as New Japanese Emperor

TOKIO, July 30.—Yoshihito, the new Emperor of Japan, took the oath of office this afternoon as successor to his father, Mutsuhito. The solemn ceremony was performed in the throne room of the palace. Earlier in the day the religious ceremonies connected with his accession were held in the imperial sanctuary.

The voice of the Emperor broke as he took the vow to perform the duties which the death of his father had imposed on him, and there were tears in the eyes of the Privy Council and Cabinet members.

The oath was administered by Prince Aritomo Yamagata, president of the Privy Council, who had worked practically all his life with the late Emperor.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—President Taft today paid a personal call on Viscount Chinda, the Japanese Ambassador, to tender his condolence on the death of the Mikado. The President today received the following replies to his messages from the new Emperor and Empress Dowager:

I am deeply touched by your sympathetic message and offer you my sincere thanks. Yoshihito.

I am deeply touched by your kind message. Pray accept my sincere thanks for the heartfelt sympathy so cordially expressed by you and Mrs. Taft on this sorrowful occasion. Haruko.

STANLEY CONSULTS BRANDEIS ON BILL

WASHINGTON, July 30.—Chairman Stanley of the Steel investigating committee held a conference today with Louis D. Brandeis of Boston and Robert R. Reed of New York, both "trust-busting" attorneys, on the features of amendments to the anti-trust law to be recommended in the majority report of the Stanley committee. Chairman Stanley will defend these proposed amendments when the Steel report is presented to the House later in the week, and Brandeis and Reed are "coaching" the Steel investigator. The anti-trust bill as proposed by the Stanley committee will follow some of the suggestions made by Brandeis when he appeared before the Judiciary Committee.

TWO GIRLS DIE IN HOTEL FIRE

FAIRLEE, Vt., July 30.—Two girls were burned to death, another person was fatally burned and two others seriously injured in a fire that destroyed the Danforth House here today.

The dead are Miss Effie Perkins of Flushing, L. I., and Miss Florence Albee of Springfield, Mass. Miss Perkins' father, mother and sister were injured.

The fire started at 6.30 a. m., probably in pine decorations in the office.

C. E. Perkins, his wife, two daughters and Miss Albee, were in a part of the hotel where their exit was cut off by the flames. Miss Effie Perkins and Miss Albee did not reach the outside.

Mr. Perkins was so terribly burned that his death is expected. Mrs. Perkins and another daughter were seriously burned.

The hotel was burned to the ground.

Mr. Perkins, his wife and his daughter Alice had a narrow escape from drowning as well as from burning. Their apartments were on the lake side of the hotel. Finding that their exit to the ground was cut off, the three jumped from the window into the lake. They were rescued with difficulty.

A search of the ruins resulted in the finding of the charred remains of one of the victims. It was thought that the other body had been entirely consumed.

Death Penalty for Robber Hens Ordered by Malden Judge

If the neighbors' hens persist in scratching up your garden, just wring their necks and throw their carcasses back over the fence. That is the proper thing to do, under a suggestion made by Judge Bruce in the Malden District Court today.

Judge Bruce made his ruling of "death penalty for meddlesome hens" in the case brought against Mrs. Rebecca Kurinsky of Malden. The complainant was Major Philip V. Mingo of Broadway, Malden, who charged that Mrs. Kurinsky's hens had damaged his garden. The case was continued.

"But, Judge," said Major Mingo, "how can I prevent the depredation of the hens until the case is tried?"

"You can wring their necks," declared the judge, with a smile, "but be sure to throw their bodies over the fence."

WILSON READY WITH SPEECH

SEAGIRT, N. J., July 30.—Governor Wilson returned to Seagirt after a four days' sail in Cleveland H. Dodge's schooner yacht, the Corona, greatly improved in health and spirits and with his speech of acceptance completed in stenographic notes and ready for dictation.

The speech, which will be delivered here at the notification ceremonies on August 7, is 6,000 words in length. The Governor would give no forecast of its contents except to say that it would not discuss the party or the platform plank of the Democratic platform.

The Governor would not discuss the recent action of the Democratic House even in voting to stick to the no platform program in defiance of public opinion nor would he say one word about the Stanley report on the steel investigation. The Governor said he had no right to interfere in any way with the program of the House of Representatives. As to the Stanley report he said he had not even read it.

Governor Wilson motored to Trenton today to attend to some important official business, and also to greet Lewis Nixon, the former Tammany leader and shipbuilder; Senator E. D. Smith of South Carolina and Congressman J. Taylor Ellyson of Virginia. Mr. Nixon had sent word to the Governor that he would like to see him, and the Governor replied that he would be in Trenton today and would be glad to have him call on him.

The Governor will dictate the speech tonight at Trenton and have it typewritten copies for revision by Wednesday morning.

CHICAGO GREETS T. R. THURSDAY

CHICAGO, July 30.—The advance guard of the politicians and newspaper correspondents for the National Progressive Convention is pouring into Chicago today.

At the Congress Hotel, where the headquarters of the new party is located, there was a revival of the busy days that preceded the Republican National meeting. Politicians stood in groups in the hotel corridors or hurried to the party headquarters, where the clerks were busy. Tomorrow most of the leaders now will arrive. Theodore Roosevelt, head of the new party, is now expected to get here on Thursday, and from the minute of his arrival the days will be busy.

Plans to make his appearance at the Coliseum impressive have been mapped out. His speech, in order not to conflict with the keynote address of Albert J. Beveridge, the temporary chairman, will be delivered at a special session Monday night.

While the former President is speaking the faces of other former Presidents will be smiling down upon him. It was decided, since this was to be a new party representing progressive thinking, that the bygone leaders of the older parties should be given a place.

COUPON THRONGS ENJOY REVERE

Sunday AMERICAN coupons were in evidence everywhere for the different shows at Revere Beach yesterday. At the Daffy House, young and old enjoyed the fun Maggie Murphy, the biggest girl on the beach, stood at the entrance taking the AMERICAN coupons. The Dream Theatre was full at every performance and furnished "no room" enjoyment.

The Old Mill is a charming ride. At the Mystic Hallway, near the Bath House, the Saturday coupons were used extensively. Look out for the free coupons for this ride next Saturday, Sunday AMERICAN coupons will admit you to the Rough Riders.

William Savage is drawing crowds this week with his novelty songs at the Theatre Comique. Coupon crowds flocked to the "Sinking of the Titanic," which has been visited by thousands during the past week. Yesterday was a great day for the suburbs of Boston with Sunday AMERICAN coupons.

In the vaudeville at the Scenic Temple "Carlos" gave his wonderful feats, and George Clarke is singing during the week his novelty songs. Parties living will took in more AMERICAN coupons yesterday than ever before, and the continued popularity of this entertainment is shown by the crowds who witnessed it.

Boston Woman Tells Why She'll Go on the Stump for Roosevelt

Mrs. Lewis J. Johnson, wife of a Harvard professor and one of three women chosen as delegates from Massachusetts to the Progressive Convention at Chicago, will take the stump and speak for the Colonel throughout the country. Mrs. Johnson was found reading one of the Colonel's speeches on the veranda of her home. She was asked why she, an ardent devotee of woman suffrage, was acting as a delegate for Colonel Roosevelt, and whether she thought he had a chance to win.

"The applause at Faneuil Hall," said she "was proof positive that the people are behind Colonel Roosevelt and the party he represents. The party is truly progressive and will win on that basis.

"For years men have been engaged in making money, while women have been absorbed in the interests of homes, husbands, and children. As a result, we now find property more carefully protected than human life. The present laws on our statute books reflect the point of view of one sex only."

"After the convention, I am going to stump for Theodore Roosevelt."

Ralph DePalma will arrive from Europe and will enter the same car with which he made such a sensational performance at Indianapolis, leading practically for 495 miles. Erwin Bergdoll has entered for the Pabst trophy and the Vanderbilt Cup race, and possibly may be a contender in the Grand Prize. Teddy Tetzlaff and Barney Oldfield will have mounts in the big event.

In its consideration of the annual postoffice appropriation bill, the Senate committee on postoffices and postroads has voted to report a provision calling for the appointment of a joint committee of House and Senate to consider Federal old road funds construction and the recommendation of a definite plan or procedure. The Senate committee voted adversely on all the proposition of government roads postal for rural free delivery routes used in the various States. The action taken concurs with the resolution pending in the House which resulted from the Federal Aid Convention, promoted in Washington last Winter by the A. A. A. National Good Roads Board, and co-operated in by such organizations as the National Grange and Farmers' Union.

EXECUTOR ALMY IS GRILLED BY SCHARTON

Manager of Russell Estate Recalled to Stand and Quizzed by Attorney.

Odlin, Fresno Dan's Personal Counsel, Also Put Upon Witness Stand.

Mr. Scharton declared that he took this step as a precaution so that he might be assured of Fresno Dan's presence at the conclusion of the hearing.

Master Pevey declined to take the action requested on the ground that it was out of the time and it would not be proper for him to assume this attitude toward the Fresno witness or any other witness until the hearing had ended.

Another striking incident of today's session involved the demonstration on the part of the spectators, some of whom clapped when Attorney Scharton replied to Attorney Nason that he would not withdraw certain evidence in his re-direct examination of Fresno Dan unless Mr. Nason consented to turn over to him, as requested earlier in the day, the typewritten transcript of questions and answers of Levi S. Gould, put to Fresno Dan upon his arrival in the East to enter claim as an heir to the Russell estate.

The outburst of applause, the first to characterize the hearing, although tension has often been high, caused Master Pevey to warn spectators that it was a court of justice, and that any transgression of the rules would lead to the expulsion of the offenders.

By CLEMENT L. POLLOCK

Don't let us get away from the basic issue," said Mr. Nason, just as suavely.

"Why did Levi Gould take such a peculiar interest in your case in talking you around?"

"Because he was a friend of my father and had been for years."

"Don't you know that your father and Gould were not friends before your father's death?"

"No, I never heard it."

"Do you recall meeting Julian Woodman when with Gould?"

"Yes, I met her."

"You did?"

And Everybody Laughed.

But this Julian doesn't happen to be alive."

This caused laughter.

"Did you meet J-U-L-I-A-N Woodman?"

"No."

"Didn't Woodman say after some talk, 'Drive on, Levi, your man's a fake.'"

"I am pretty sure nothing of that kind was said."

"You said Mr. Bugby had a daughter with red cheeks?"

"Yes."

"Don't you know he never had a daughter?"

"No."

"Would you be surprised to know that this is a fact?"

"Yes."

Sticks to His Statement.

"And you still say that he has a daughter?"

"Yes."

"You said Mr. Copeland lives at Spot Pond?"

"Yes."

"Don't you know he lives in Malden?"

"No."

"Would you be surprised to learn that he did?"

"I would."

In spite of the verbal lashing he has received at his hands for days, Fresno Dan today paid Attorney Scharton a compliment at recess, when he said:

"I kind of like to have you popping questions at me because I don't get any chance to sleep while you're on deck."

Did you say you didn't know Mary A. Livermore?"

"I didn't know her personally. I heard about her."

"You know John Norris?"

"Yes."

"Did you know he was Mrs. Livermore's son-in-law?"

"No."

Fresno Dan said that the Universalist Church looked the same to him when he returned to Melrose, although it had been completely remodelled.

"Anything pathetic on the day you left home?"

"No."

Did you bid anyone good bye?"

"Yes, my mother."

Left Father Without Farewell.

"Didn't you bid your father good bye?"

"No."

"Why, when he had given you $100?"

"He was away."

Attorney Scharton and Fresno Dan met this morning on a prepayment trolley car bound for court.

"Hello, Dan!" shouted Dakota Dan's counsel.

"How do, how do!" drawled the fruit picker, bashfully, as he shuffled for a front seat.

"Where was he?"

"I don't know."

"Did you bid the servant girl good bye?"

"Yes."

Fresno Dan further testified that Bertha

SPECTATORS' APPLAUSE DRAWS PEVEY WARNING

Yorke ran after him and pleaded with him not to go away.

"Did she weep on your shoulder?"

"No."

"Don't you know that she testified to that?"

"I don't know it."

"What was there between you and Bertha Yorke that called for such affection between you?"

"We were best friends."

Attorney Scharton asked Fresno Dan about his visit to Bertha Yorke in Minnesota. The lawyer held in his hand a letter Bertha Yorke had written to Fresno Dan.

"Did you go to Cass Lake with her?"

"Yes."

"Where was her husband?"

"In Missouri."

"She says in this letter that she would hail you with joy if you came out. Did she?"

"Yes, she was glad to see me."

Bertha Yorke's first married name was Johnson. Fresno Dan said he didn't know her husband's first name. As Fresno Dan was known at one time as Henry Johnson, Attorney Scharton's questioning indicated that he was trying to show that Fresno Dan was at one time Bertha Yorke's husband.

Russell Kept Letter Secret.

Scharton took up the letter which Fresno Dan wrote to William C. Russell on March 6, 1910. This letter, by the way, one of the lawyers on Fresno Dan's side told me William C. Russell kept to himself until a day or two before it was read in court. According to this lawyer, the Russell estate lawyers didn't know William C. Russell had the letter at all.

"What led you to think that William C. Russell was in danger of arrest as you said in the letter?"

Reading the article in the paper."

Fresno Dan read in a newspaper on February 21 (the Fresno Herald) about the case, but delayed writing until March 6.

Fresno Dan said he went through the papers carefully, but did not find anything about the Russell case between February 21 and March 18.

"Didn't you delay writing because you were in consultation about the case?"

"No, I did not."

Fresno Dan stoutly denied that he was acting all his time pointing upon the Russell case so that he might come forward as a Russell claimant. The witness said that Chief of Police Shaw of Fresno wrote to the police of Melrose. He denied that Detective Enoch wrote the letter.

Fresno Dan testified that he had no lawyer on March 6 when he wrote his letter to William C. Russell. Scharton got him to admit that he had retained Lawyer Cartwright before he wrote the letter.

"Who is Mr. Preble?"

"He was formerly of Boston."

"What is his business?"

"I don't know; he is pretty hard up."

Fresno Dan said Preble examined him about Melrose. He didn't know why Preble examined him.

Why He Answered Him.

"Why did you answer Preble unless Odlin sent him there if you didn't know him?"

"I wanted to be polite."

"Would you answer questions put by anyone who asked you?"

"Yes, if he was a gentlemen."

"What did you mean by saying you got yourself into this scrape to save your brother?"

"I meant the Russell will scrape."

Scharton sprung a good one today. He got a scorching Sunday while swimming at the North Shore. He was jollied about it. To the ninety-ninth person who wanted to know where sad how, "Billy" said: "This isn't a sunburn. It's a Frisco Tan."

"And you are the real Daniel Blake Russell?"

"Yes, I am.

"And you call getting your birthright a scrape?"

"Yes, a big scrape."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I mean it will be a big scrape before we get through."

"Why did you write 'I don't know how you think of me, but I have only love for you?'"

"Twenty-five years makes a lot of difference. I didn't know how they'd take me at home."

Scharton Waxes Sarcastic.

Mr. Scharton was sarcastic with the Californian. He insinuated that Preble was a forerunner of Attorney Odlin, preparing Fresno Dan to come forward and claim the inheritance.

Scharton showed Fresno a booklet and asked him something about it. Nason wanted the booklet.

"I'll give it to you," said Scharton, "if you give me the Levi Gould typewriting questions."

The audience applauded this, clapping gently and laughing. This brought a sharp reprimand from Judge Pevey.

Scharton then asked that Fresno Dan put under bonds so that he would be sure to be on hand when he was to be one of the hearing. Scharton charged that he would show that Fresno Dan had committed perjury before the end of the case.

"I ask," said Scharton, "that Fresno Dan be remanded by you and compelled to furnish a bond that will be sure he will be here at the conclusion of the case. We expect to show before the end of the trial that perjury was committed and that this witness did it."

He said that if Mr. Pevey refused to put Fresno Dan under bonds, the responsibility would rest with him.

Mr. Pevey declined to place Fresno Dan under bonds at this time, however, he said he didn't feel called upon to decide whether at this stage of the proceedings the Californian had committed perjury.

Mr. Almy was again recalled to the stand. Scharton repeated his questions as to whether Almy had tried to put William C. Russell in an asylum.

MACK'S OLD RULES PROVE WINNERS FOR THE RED SOX

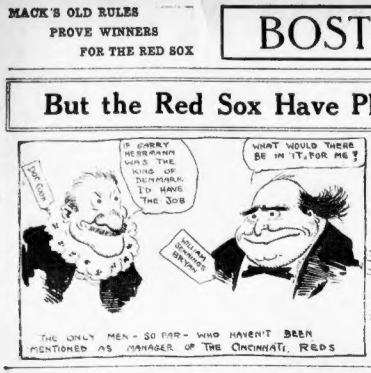
BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTING NEWS

BROWN BATTLE ON GRIDIRON FEATURE GAME ON PENN CARD

But the Red Sox Have Plenty of Lunch.

Copyright, 1912, by the National News Association

By Hal Coffman



I CARRY HERRMANN WAS THE KING OF REPUBLICANS TO HAVE THE JOB
WHAT WOULD THERE BE IN IT, FOR ME?
THE ONLY MEN - SO FAR - WHO HAVEN'T BEEN MENTIONED AS MANAGER OF THE CINCINNATI REDS

RED SOX RILEY'S COLUMN PILGRIMS

JAKE STAHL has broken all records for withdrawing unbeaten pitchers. Stahl has shown himself the quickest man in baseball to change twirlers. Sunday he took Joe Wood out of the box with the game 5 to 4 in his favor, substituting Bedient, and yesterday he yanked out Collins in the fifth to substitute "Buck" O'Brien, with the same result.

STAHL adopted the policy early in the season. He found that he had four or five pitchers on his hands, all of whom were capable of winning more games than they would lose. They have kept in form and have gradually improved under Stahl's and Carrigan's careful eyes. So Jake is not only able, but eager to withdraw a pitcher at the first sign of his going to pieces.

JAKE does not wait until he is beaten. When he gets a game "on ice" he tries to keep it there and uses his best men to hold it. When the other fellow has obtained a big lead Jake tries experiments, but he doesn't let a game get away from him if he can help it.

HE withdrew Wood because Chicago scored four runs in an inning, and he took Collins out yesterday because three hits were made in a row. No other manager would decide to change so quickly.

THE policy of the Red Sox manager is to keep close watch of what the other fellow is likely to do. If Collins, for instance, happens to hand out balls that are hit, he feels that he has four other men who are extremely likely not to be hit, and he makes a quick change. The man thus withdrawn is ready for work again the next day. "Heine" Wagner watches this part of the game closely, and there is a perfect understanding with the pitchers. They are frank and rarely object to withdrawal, for each knows that his turn will come, and while O'Brien takes Collins' place today, Collins is likely to replace O'Brien tomorrow.

WHEN the other fellows begin to get their eyes on the ball Wagner goes over to the Sox pitcher and talks it over. Maybe that steadies him, and the batter ends. Maybe he confesses that he has found that he hasn't "all his stuff" today, and another twirler substitutes.

STAHL, Wagner and Carrigan keep their fingers on the pulses of the pitchers more delicately than is done in any other team in the American League, and that policy has succeeded.

A MELROSE man declares that he tried to polish his lad up on geography and history before sending him to school this Fall, with this result:

"Now, Johnny, why do they call Texas the Lone Star State?"

"Why, the only star that ever came from Texas was Tris Speaker."

THE man that sent that to the writer overlooks the fact that toward Joe Bailey once produced a similar story, modestly piling up the gap before Speaker "arrived" by using his own name. Since then Bailey has been retired to the "busher leagues."

THERE'S a difference between baseball stars and political stars. When the former are found to have "the goods" they're benched forever; when the latter are caught "with the goods" they're elected.

SPEAKER is THE hero of Texas today.

Which completes the sentence begun above. Nothing sinister about the word "sentence." This is baseball—not politics.

THEY'RE coining names for Speaker already.

"Triphammer Tris" is the latest. "The Bull Moose" is another.

Baseball as Divorce Evil Cure

Mrs. Britton Wants Women Fans

By SYBIL WARNE.

When women can talk more intelligently on baseball games to their husbands divorce will be less divorce suits.

Many a home would be happier if wives would talk baseball with their "hubbies."

Talk it to your growing boy.

Talk it to your growing daughters.

Eastern women stop playing solitaire in your homes these warm afternoons, but get out in the open and see the game.

Mrs. Helen Robison Britton, owner of the St. Louis Nationals, who is here with her team, urges baseball as a great home builder. When seen at the Hotel Brunswick, where she is stopping for a few days with her children, DeHass, ten years, and Marie, eight years, told me in her cute way that wives can do more with their husbands if they will talk baseball to them instead of grocery bills.

Even the boys will think more of their mothers, when they can answer the question, "Who won the game today?"

Baseball Circuit to the Heart.

According to Mrs. Britton, if women want to get near to the hearts of men, they must talk baseball to them.

She says a man will listen everytime and stop at the front door twenty minutes before he goes, if you call him to the window to fling out how the game goes, and he can be a little late, but a man being home the sooner.

Homes may have some mutual interest. Baseball fits in better than anything else, declares Mrs. Britton.

A knowledge of the different baseball games going on weekly should be as much the pride of a woman as other things in her house, said Mrs. Britton, as she was giving in detail the many games that she had recently attended in the West.

How to Make Homes Happy.

I just delight in seeing a good game. It is the greatest recreation that I have. Then, again, when you meet gentlemen in your own home who are talking the game over with others, how much more entertaining a lady is when she can hold a word in discussing the different points of a game.

Many a home would be happier if the wife would only get familiar with the games and talk it over with her husband at the dinner table. Instead of the many things that are discussed on such occasions, why would it not do a lot of women good to be able to keep track of the different games and chat with their husbands over them?

Don't you think that he would be more inclined to stay at home nights, instead of going around to the clubs to find some one to talk to about the game?

Then there are our boys. Every boy is carried away with baseball. Generally speaking he has to in his father to talk over the games, while the mother in trying to get interested in some sport.

Fanning Bee After Dinner.

But if mothers would only study the games daily—read about them—then go with her son to the games. I believe the atmosphere of many homes would be changed.

Many a man comes home tired and does not want to hear anything more about things going wrong. But want an opportunity has the wife here to just sitting down with her husband and talking over the game that has just been played.

How are we going to start to do our part in these days? Telling them fairy stories, asked Mrs. Britton with a ripple of laughter.

If mothers want to get near to their boys, talk to them about baseball. Why all boys like to hear about the games!

Take the boys as often as possible to a baseball game. Let the mother point out here and there the science of the game in her own way.

Instead of so many wealthy ! ple sending their sons to a Summer camp, let mothers spend part of their time in enjoying baseball with their sons in the summer time.

Western Women all Fans.

So you can see my points. Talk with your husbands about baseball. Talk with your sons about it. Even let the daughters get familiar with it.

Our West, we women take more interest in the game than the Eastern women. I suppose the lone women in the East are still playing solitaire during these lovely days. Of course, some of them and then they complain of a back ache.

Why do not Eastern ladies get more out in the open air? Breathe the fresh air of the baseball field. Be seen constantly in the crowds that flock to the games.

It will keep them young. It will give them plenty to talk about in an interesting way.

It just works me up sometime to see how some women will flitter away their time fiddlers and spurn the likes of going to a baseball game.

Baseball and Nut Fashions.

Sometimes they will say, What have I got to go out for? I don't care to call upon anyone. It's too hot. You know I just say to those women, Go to a ball game. Go to it for the sake of your husband. Go to it for the sake of your boys.

When a wife is able to talk intelligently about a ball game and get more of the talk on fashions, I believe that there will be less divorces and more happy homes.

Every Western woman go to the polo games in Cleveland. We all enjoy it. Men and women alike on the game makes life so much more interesting. For a time to have a woman saying something to him that he is interested in.

So many wives talk about everything but what is interesting to their husbands.

Family Gathering Place.

But the younger generation of women is changing. You will hear more baseball talk from the younger generation of women than from the old.

The time is coming when, I think, that evenings will show up show during the games, and father, mother and children will go to them and enjoy them together and not make it a mere male diversion, as it seems to be, in many Eastern places today.

WALSH OPPOSES RED SOX TODAY

CHICAGO, July 30.—Charley Hall against Ed Walsh. That was the dope which came from the two camps of Sox as they prepared to line up for the last game of their series today. It was to be a fight for a clean sweep of the series on the part of the Red Sox. It was a desperate effort on the part of Manager Callahan to land one of the quartet of battles for his crew. And a fine fight was looked for.

You know the Red Sox want to win. They dance they must win and that Chicago just now is the ideal place in which to grab victories. Because there is nothing in the world to sap confidence like defeat and when you hang three straight on a ball club, you have the right to figure that you have their Angora. That's the manner in which the fellows who take orders from Stahl figure.

Down on the South Side they want to win at least one game from their Boston foes. The fans here are demanding victories. You see, their pennant hopes were aroused early in the year and were dashed. Now the team is in danger of slipping out of the first division.

Walsh will work despite the fact that he has had too much of it in the last few weeks. He pitched against the Red Sox on Saturday. That was after pitching a full game on Thursday and finishing one on Wednesday. But since the Highlanders are to follow the Red Sox, Walsh has been promised rest. This shows you that the fellows on the Boston crew are not being favored while they are in Chicago. Any time that you watch this "Big" Walsh twice against a team in one series you are not committing any great act of friendship.

The Red Sox certainly are winning much popularity in this city and the semi-official word the fans seem to be with them. That may be because Jake Stahl, the manager, and Robert Roth, the owner, are Chicago products. Just the same, the fans are giving the fellows from Boston the glad hand every opportunity. About every time that Stahl shows near the stands or when the fans can make themselves heard he is informed that since it seems impossible for the White Sox to win that the Red Sox are being pulled for.

"Gibbons Is a Marvel," Says Jem Maloney

NEW YORK, July 30.—"If Mike Gibbons should visit England he'd be all the rage," said Jem Maloney, manager of Bombardier Wells. "Englishmen rave over great box ers, but they've never seen the equal of Gibbons. He is in a class by himself. Why? Because he has brains and knows how to fool the other fellow completely.

"His feinting is marvelous. He feints until the other chap is tired of throwing up his hands to protect his face. Then the moment he lowers them Gibbons is there with the quickest kind of punch to the mark. He has a clever way of avoiding swings. He has two movements of the head, one directly back and the other to the right or left, at the same time ducking the left so he can come back with alacrity and hit either the body or the face.

"He's made a study of the boxing game, and I'd like to predict if he ever sees Eddie McGoorty he'll win easily. He'd jab Carpentier to ribbons, and I believe he'd also win over Klaus on points. There is only one Englishman worthy of a bout with Gibbons. That is Jack Harrison, the middleweight champion, but Mike would beat him to a certainty."

AD WOLGAST AGREES TO BOX M'FARLAND

CHICAGO, July 30.—Ad Wolgast agreed today before he left for his home in Cadillac, Mich., that he would meet Packy McFarland in a ten-round engagement at Madison Square Garden, September 20 or 27. All that is necessary now is for the promoters to guarantee the champion $22,500.

Ad agreed to allow Packy to weigh in at 135 at 3 o'clock, or five hours before the set-to.

NO TRIAL HEATS IN NATIONAL REGATTA

PEORIA, Ill., July 30.—There will be no rowing of races by heats in the National regatta here next month, according to announcement of the local committee in charge of this year's big aquatic feature of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen. The course here at Peoria affords ample water space for as many as a dozen contestants, and national regatta fields are never that large.

PILGRIMS PLAY CARDS IN FINAL

Today is getaway day for the Cardinals, Bresnahan's men playing their last game of the series this afternoon with the Pilgrims and then going to Philadelphia for a series. Bresnahan also wants to get away with the game scheduled. Yesterday's game was called off on account of the rain, but no double-header is booked for today. Boston and St. Louis each have a double bill booked for Wednesday, so the managers were satisfied with the single bottle this afternoon.

The Pilgrims already have one game tucked away in this series against one for St. Louis, so Kling is anxious to win today and take the series. The players have now had a two days' rest and are in condition to play a fighting fast game of ball. Kling has his pitchers working in good order at present, but now he is troubled by the defensive playing of the team. The fielding has not been as good during the past few weeks as it should be, but with morning practice while at home Kling hopes that this difficulty will be bettered.

With Al Bridwell back in the lineup the shortstop position should be played a bit steadier. Bridwell is a veteran at the game and knows the plays almost before they are played, so this position should not trouble the team much longer. O'Rourke is a clever little player and looks for him to develop into a much more experience before he can play the short field for a big league team.

McDonald is finding himself at third base, playing a good fielding game and also is hitting the ball quite regularly during the past two weeks. Gowdy is expected back this week, and with Sweeney playing good old-time ball and the outfield working good, Manager Kling predicts that the team is due to win many games before this season comes to a close.

LAST CALL FOR B. B. TOUR VOTE

Polls close tomorrow at 11 a. m. for next Sunday's vote standing.

Any votes received after that time, except those showing postmark before will not be counted for next Sunday's list.

Every minute from now until tomorrow morning at 11 should be made to produce a vote so that your start in the race on next Sunday will be a good start.

Candidates are warned that each package containing votes must be marked—and plainly, with the name and address of the one for whom the ballots are cast, otherwise no credit, as there is no blank space provided for this purpose on the vote coupons. Care is necessary in this matter. If you do not wish to lose hundreds and, perhaps, thousands of votes in this way.

Candidates' photographs are coming in very slowly. Modesty is a good thing at times, but each contestant who is wide-awake will respond, without delay to the Contest Editor's request for each candidate's photograph.

LOWELL EXCEEDS LIMIT.

LAWRENCE, July 30.—Manager Louis Piesner of the local club may enter a protest to the league officials in regard to the Lowell Club having 17 players on the team recently, all of whom were practically in good shape. The matter has also been talked over by other managers in the league and they feel that something should be done in the matter as it is a violation of a New England League rule to have more than 14 and a violation of the National Baseball Association to have more than 16. It is also said that Young Smith, who is with Lowell, is the property of the Red Sox.

GIRLS EAGER FOR SWIMMING RACE

Come on girls, get in the swim!

The AMERICAN is now receiving entries for the second annual swimming race in the Charles River Basin, to take place on Saturday, August 10. In this race the girls' championship of the New England States will be decided.

The girls' swimming race of last year was the leading athletic event of the season. This year's race will surpass the one of last year. The Tremont Beach contingent carried away the laurels last year. Madeline Gibson of Dorchester finished in the lead and her sister, Gertrude, was a close second. They will be contestants in the coming race.

Twenty-six girl swimmers have already entered the lists for this big event. The entries are coming to the AMERICAN office by every mail.

Send in your name, girls. The AMERICAN'S Swimming Editor will see that they are entered. There will be no change in the course from last year. It will be about two miles long, running parallel with the Boston side of the lower basin, between the Union Boat Club landing and Harvard Bridge.

There is no entrance fee or any expense for the contestants. The race, which is for the amateur girls' championship of New England, is open to all.

Just send your name to the Swimming Editor of the AMERICAN, No. 82 Summer street, giving name, age and address. That is all. Then watch the Daily and Sunday AMERICAN for instructions.

There will be cup prizes for the winners and medals for all the girls that finish.

Sport Carnival for Norwood Press Club

An open handicap meet will be held on the afternoon of Labor Day at the carnival and field day of the Norwood Press Club at Berwick Park, Norwood. The events include 100-yard dash, one-cloth mile run, one-half mile run, one mile run, Golf and silver watches will be given for first and second prize, respectively, in each event.

The events will be open to all registered athletes by applying to Frank H. Caswell, Norwood Press Club, Norwood. Entries close August 29.

Other attractions at the carnival are baseball games between the Norwood Press Club nine and the Walpole A. A., the Press Club second nine and the Dedham A. A., and a Gaelic football game between the Shamrocks of Norwood and the Emmets of Dedham.

Eleven Hard Games for Penn's Eleven

PHILADELPHIA, July 30.—With eleven games on its football schedule, the University of Pennsylvania team faces one of the hardest campaigns a Red and Blue eleven has been called upon to meet for many a year. Manager P. L. Perot has spared no pains to give the Quakers a hard and attractive schedule, and he has succeeded to such a degree that Head Coach Andy Smith will have his work cut out to drill an eleven to cope with Penn's opponents.

All games will be played at Franklin Field with the exception of the struggle with Brown. The Quakers will make their lone trip out of town to Providence on October 19. The Michigan game comes one week earlier this year than the contest with the Indians, while the annual Thanksgiving day clash with Cornell will be the usual affair at Franklin Field.

The dates follow:

Saturday, September 28, Gettysburg; Wednesday, October 2, Franklin and Marshall; Saturday, October 5, Dickinson; Wednesday, October 9, Ursinus; Saturday, October 12, Swarthmore; Saturday, October 19, Brown at Providence, R. I.; Saturday, October 26, Lafayette; Saturday, November 2, State College; Saturday, November 9, Michigan; Saturday, November 16, Indians; Thursday, November 28, Cornell.

NAPS CAN KRAUSE.

CLEVELAND, July 30.—Pitcher Harry Krause was sold back to the Toledo American Association Club by the Cleveland Naps. He was acquired last week from Toledo in trade for Pitcher Mitchell. Mack's Old Rules Win for Red Sox

Beat Trailers and Leaders Too

By BILL BAILEY.

Kick the tail-enders every time that you meet them and you'll be up in the pennant race.

That's what Connie Mack used to say and that is what the Red Sox have been doing, and there's none to say that the fellows from Boston aren't up there. They have it on the Senators by seven games and on the Athletics by ten. And the difference between these three teams is almost the difference in their play against the tail-enders, meaning the New York Highlanders and the St. Louis Browns.

If I can get just a bit better than an even break with the leaders and then whale the tail-enders I'll win the pennant," was what Connie Mack said when he was through here two years ago and again last year. That was before he had the pennant cinched.

"You can lick the leaders all right. But if you fall down when you are against the easy marks in the league you'll never get to the top. Too few managers understand that fact. They play ceiling ball when they are against the strong teams in the league. But when they go against the fellows who should not, they let up to keep their men going at the strongest clip. The result is that the leaders grab a game here and there and the next thing you know you aren't on top."

Jake Stahl apparently entertained the same notion. And any time the leaders go against the tail-enders they are for down in the pennant fight he makes those Red Sox play just twice as hard.

And the figures will show you that this manner of play has had much to do with the success of the Boston idea. Take the play of the red-hosed athletics. They have met Washington fifteen times and have lost eight of their games.

The Senators have the series on the leaders on the year. But the Senators haven't trimmed the Highlanders with the same consistency. The Red Sox have licked the New Yorkers in 11 contests of fifteen battles. The Washington lads have won eleven and lost five when contesting against the Highlanders.

There's a difference of three and one-half games, just half of the lead that the Boston lads have on Clark Griffith's men.

Take the Athletics. They have won nine and lost three to the New Yorkers. There's a gain of four games on the part of the Red Sox.

It's so with the St. Louis Browns. The Red Sox have won ten and lost a single game to Stovall's crowd. The Athletics have won seven and lost four. There's a gain of another three games.

So the Red Sox have gained seven full games from the Athletics in their fight against the tail-end teams. That's within three of the difference between the world's champions and the leaders.

Olympic Games for U. B. S. at Woonsocket

WOONSOCKET, R. I., July 30.—The pick of the athletes of the East, including a large batch of Olympic stars, will participate in the British Day celebration and Olympic games to be held here on Saturday, August 17, under the auspices of the United British Societies of this city. A team from the B. A. A. has been entered.

The big events of the day will be the Olympic Handicap Contests. There are nine events. A large list of entries already received by the management of the affair from some of the best athletes in the East, insures plenty of warm competition. The sports will be preceded by a street parade.

Entries close on August 8, with Duncan B. Cunningham, No. 906 Harris avenue, Woonsocket, R. I.

Shortstop Aubrey Ill, Quits Worcester Team

WORCESTER, July 30.—Harry Aubrey, shortstop of the Worcester team of the New England Baseball League, was given leave of absence for the remainder of the year by Manager Burkett on account of ill health. Aubrey is going to his home in Baltimore to submit to an operation. He managed the Haverhill team of the league during the early part of last year.

Pitcher Patrick Connolly, who came here from Haverhill, was released by Manager Burkett.

MRS. BRITTON HERE TO ROOT FOR CARDS

Mrs. Helene Robison Britton, owner of the St. Louis Nationals, is here to root for the Cards. With here are her two children, De Hass, aged ten, and Muriel Eva, and her friend, Mrs. S. C. Evans.

Of course you have to trim the other fellows, too, if you are to remain in the hunt. But if you can get just a bit better than an even break and then hammer the fellows who are down in the race you stand a mighty slight better chance of landing on top than if you whale the leaders and then break a trifle better than even with the fellows who are trailing.

Class may consist in beating the strong. But the way to win pennants is to go after the minnows in the league and trounce them every time you meet.

Those are the arguments that Connie Mack used to make when he was on top. Apparently they apply just as well when someone else is leading.

The boss of the world's champions understood just as well as anybody else how easy it was to fail to play your best game against the easy teams.

When you are against a strong club you're on your toes and in the game every minute. But when the little fellows are the opponents there is always the inclination to loaf just a trifle because you have the idea that you'll win anyhow, and what's the use of exerting yourself? Then comes a bad lurch or a lucky wallop and the game is gone.

Whatever the tail-ender" was the adeia of Connie Mack and the fact that the Boston Red Sox have hammered harder than have the world's champions is no argument against it.

All Leaders Win in Tenth Chess Round

Marshall, United States Champion, Still Tied for Third Place in Tourney.

BRESLAU, July 30.—All of the leaders in the international chess masters' tournament won their games in the tenth rounds, and in consequence Dr. Tarrasch of Nuremberg held his place in the van of experts, with a total of eight and a half of a possible ten points. His opponent was Przepiorka.

Rudolewitz, with a victory over Treybal, trails the German champion closely, while Marshall, the United States champion, remains tied for third place with Teichmann. Marshall worsted Breyer and Teichmann defeated Burn, who, in the previous round, had proved the American's nemesis.

The tenth round was remarkable in that not a single draw was recorded. Jaques won a fine game from Spielmann, Cohn fell to Lowitzky, Duras scored against Halle, and Harasz downed Lewitzky.

After ten rounds the scores are the following:

Players.	W.	L.	Players	W.	L.
Tarrasch	8½	1½	Lowitzky	4½	5½
Rubinstein	7½	2½	Leonhardt	4½	5½
Marshall	7½	2½	Cohn	4	6
Teichmann	6½	3½	Mieses	4	6
Rudolewitz	6½	3½	Schlechter	3½	6½
Burn	6	4	Przepiorka	3½	6½
Jaques	6	4	Treybal	3	7
Breyer	5½	4½	Halle	2½	7½

HARVARD ROWING COACH MAY MEET BRITISH CHAMPION

WRAY READY TO RACE FOR WORLD'S TITLE

James Wray, the noted Harvard coach, will, it is expected, make an attempt this Fall to wrest the world's sculling championship from Kinsey Harry of England. Negotiations will soon be under way to make arrangements for the international match.

If the negotiations are successful—and at the present time they look promising—it will mark the return of the famous coach of the Harvard University crew to the sculling game, after an absence of ten years. Wray is a former American sculling champion. He left the game to become coach at Harvard.

Harry has stated his willingness to share in this international match. Wray told an AMERICAN reporter that it was his one ambition to take part in another big sculling match before advancing age made his return to the game impossible.

"I am perfectly willing to race Harry for the world's championship," he told an AMERICAN representative. "I would be equally willing to meet him in his country or on the other side of the water. Whether or not I challenge him, however, all depends upon my backer, Mr. George Lee.

"I am in good shape right now, although about ten pounds overweight, and if the match was arranged, could leave for England in two or three weeks. By Fall I believe I would be in perfect trim to meet the champion.

"I know the course on the Thames—over which I have rowed several times—as well as I know the Charles River. So that this would not handicap my chances.

"I know Harry quite well. Years ago I rowed in several handicap matches with him. He is a good oarsman, but if I can get back to form I feel confident that I can take his measure—or at least give him a good battle.

"I don't think my long absence from the game will prove much of a handicap. You see, though I have not rowed any match races, yet my work at Harvard and my love of the game has kept me on the water, so that I have not gone back. Then, I have always taken the best of care of myself, have abstained from tobacco and liquors, and just now I feel as well as ever in my life.

"Such a race would please me very much. I love the game as much as ever, though my duties at Harvard have kept me out of it. Before I quit for good I should like to have just one more whack at it.

"If satisfactory arrangements are made the match will probably be held in England, where the interest in sculling is greater than in this country. I shall get in touch with Mr. Lee and if everything is arranged satisfactorily shall this Fall go after the championship."

World Bike Champion To Race at Revere

Local bike followers will have their first chance of seeing Emile Friol, the world's champion sprinter, in action next Saturday night when he will appear in a match race with Peter Drobach, the South Boston cyclist.

Friol's only other appearance in this country was at Madison Square Garden two years ago, shortly after he won the sprinting championship of the world at Brussels.

A twenty-five-mile motor-paced race, in which will appear the favorite, Clarence Carman, together with George Wiley, Means Bedell and Ernie Pye, the Salt Lake rider, will make another feature on the program. Then there will be the amateur and professional sprint events, which have become quite popular with the followers of the bearded track racing.

Champion Wolgast Fears Defeat

Title Holder Is After Clean-Up

By ED. W. SMITH.

Ad Wolgast is asking for $55,000 for making three fights.

And at first blush people are inclined to say, "Gee, what a wolf for the coin he must be."

In a sense that's true. With Wolgast it is a case of getting it while the getting is good. But from the other side of the picture is isn't such a fiercely exorbitant demand.

Wolgast always has been one of the greatest drawing cards the ring ever has in the lightweight division.

When promoters stage him with anybody who, on paper, looks like something of a match for the Cadillac man they can reasonably look for a record breaking gate.

Knows He is a Card.

Wolgast knows better than anybody his worth in the box office. Experience has taught him that promoters usually can take chances with him and offer him big money. Hence his demands run high. Why not?

Jim Coffroth said he laughed outright when Wolgast sprung his terms on him. There's a reason, though, for fighting the game right now is in bad shape in San Francisco, and it would take a battle between Jack Johnson and Sam Langford to draw out a syndicate of a house.

People out there seem to have tired of the game, or times are too hard, or there is some reason for the slump. In the palmy days that Coffroth once knew he could well afford to clinch Wolgast on the latter's own terms.

But understanding conditions the way he does, it's no wonder that Coffroth laughed.

Drew $40,000 with Rivers.

Just glance over some of the houses Wolgast has drawn and you won't be surprised at his demands. Didn't he and Rivers draw $40,000 into McCarey's arena July 4?

And isn't it reasonable to suppose that Wolgast and Richie or Wolgast and Rivers right back would equal that gate? Ad asks $15,000 for the first battle, $20,000 for the second and a like sum for a clash with Packey.

A fighter is always worth a certain percentage of what he can draw. Wolgast knows he can draw the coin and that's why he demands it.

Are His Feet Slipping?

And there's another point that I think is on Wolgast's mind. I have an idea that Champion Ad has designs on fighting for one more big money match in this section. Now I have the championship, the promoters think I ought to be the draw.

Jack said that reports that he was through after his little mix-up with Jeannette or Sam Langford were untrue.

JACK JOHNSON QUITS RING

CHICAGO, July 30.—Champion Jack Johnson has retired. The negro heavyweight ended his ring career at midnight last night. Asserting that he was disgusted with the game and that he had given every fighter entitled to it a chance he voluntarily moved up the date of his retirement which had been announced to take place on Labor Day.

No more fights. Jack is adamant on that proposition. Even a hundred thousand big dollar dollars could not tempt him into a pair of gloves for a real fight, he says.

"They won't let me fight a white man in New York and there's too much red tape connected with the shows in Paris. I've got all I can get out of the game now. This will be the last fight in which I engage myself," he said. "There is no chance for me to come back. I'm through, and that means that there can be no inducement offered which will be sufficiently strong to tempt me to don my fighting clothes again.

"I may do some exhibition work, but as far as a real bout goes there is nothing doing. I said before my fight with Flynn that I was through on Labor Day, but as the promoters don't see fit to give me what I want it is good bye to the arena. I feel that I have given every fighter, who was worthy of a chance, a battle and that is all I can do. I was willing to fight for me much more than a million dollars. Now I have the championship, the promoters think I ought to be the draw.

Jack said that reports that he was through after his little mix-up with Jeannette or Sam Langford were untrue.

Dr. Cahill Again to Coach At Worcester

WORCESTER, July 30.—Dr. Harry P. Cahill, who has made an enviable reputation as a football coach, will look after the Worcester Academy eleven this Fall. This will be his second season as coach of the Worcester Academy team.

Dr. Cahill's success with the 1911 Worcester Academy team was remarkable. The team was not defeated by any prep school eleven and played an even game with such teams as the Harvard and Dartmouth freshmen eleven.

Dr. Cahill will have a huge task on his hands this Fall. He will have to rebuild last year's splendid machine with practically no new material. Only two of last year's stars will return to school in the Fall—Emil Jacques and Walter Schwinn. As Jacques and Schwinn are both backfield men, Coach Cahill will have to form a new line and half of a new backfield.

Coach Hillman Signs a Five-Year Contract

HANOVER, N. H., July 30.—Harry Hillman has been signed to coach the Dartmouth varsity track team for the next five years, indicating that track sports will be maintained as a major sport for at least that period. Hillman, although a young man, has already made a name for himself as a great track coach, and this news will gladden the hearts of every Dartmouth man.

Hillman has turned out some fine teams during the last few years, with a run of five years before him it is expected that he will work wonders with his men. He is building a fine residence in this town, so that all of his time can be spent with his track candidates.

"PAL" MOORE IS ROBBED.

CLEVELAND, July 30.—Phil Brock got the decision over "Pal" Moore in a twelve-round bout at Luna Park tonight. Moore was cheated. Brock elbowed, butted, got a chancery hold around the neck with one hand and lambasted with the other and every conceivable fashion abused the unsavory rules.

In the seventh round the Chief of Police of Newburg stilled up to the ring to stop the battle because of Brock's elbowing, but was turned back on the plea that it was too good a fight to end in such a manner.

The Making of a Pretty Girl

How to Dress Appropriately

The girl in the picture is wearing $1,000 worth of clothes, including her hat. With this costume she could wear jewels of any price. Were she to wear good imitation jewelry no one would believe that it was not genuine.

One Thousand Dollars' Worth of Clothes

By Margaret Hubbard Ayer

WHEN you go down the street you instinctively judge every girl you meet by her clothes, don't you? Do you realize that she is judging you by yours?

I recommended a young girl for a stenographer not long ago, and sent her with a letter to a friend of mine who had a very good position to offer.

The girl was capable and efficient, and was nicely and suitably dressed—at least she was when she left me with the letter—but she evidently thought she would impress herself by adding a few trinkets and make a better impression on her new employer, for I received this irate message from him over the 'phone: "She's impossible—I don't care how well she can work—I can't stand cheap jewelry—why should she wear a big sparkling rhinestone on her chest in the office? My wife would never think of wearing so many hoop jewels even for a big dinner."

It was hopeless to argue with him, as the thermometer was almost at boiling point and the man was right anyhow. I had a heart-to-heart talk with my small girl. She won't make the mistake again of wearing imitation diamonds, even in the form of hatpins, during working hours, for she was judged at once by the most conspicuous thing about her, the sparkle of cheap, pretentious and absolutely false and unsuitable ornaments.

No Real Rule

So much imitation jewelry is worn nowadays that one cannot merely wave it aside and call it vulgar, as was the custom even ten years ago.

There are plenty of good, near-precious stones that there is one unfailing rule for them. Never wear the imitation when it would not be good taste to wear the real jewels if you possessed them.

No woman of the fashionable world wears her beautiful diamonds with a plain shirt waist or a simple cotton frock.

The woman of wealth never wears a profusion of jewels except on state occasions and never by daylight. She confines herself to a brooch and love pins generally of semi-precious stones for morning wear such as are necessary to her costume. Incidentally, it is not considered good taste to wear many rings on the middle finger, for the simple reason that this makes the hand look larger and more awkward than when the rings are placed on the fourth finger of either hand.

$1,000 Worth of Clothes

The girl in the picture is wearing $1,000 worth of clothes, including her hat. With this costume she could wear jewels of any price, and were she to wear good imitation jewelry no one would ever believe that it was not genuine. But she looks as if she were a young person who does not believe in shams of any kind, sham jewels or sham feelings.

Now sham jewelry is almost always detected, excepting when one is dressed in such a manner as to throw the jewels in the shade. If you wear inexpensive frocks, wear plain and inconspicuous pins, even a real pearl necklace will be branded as "fake" if it is worn with an inappropriate costume.

Whatever clothes you wear, see that they and all the accessories are appropriate. A party hat and a raincoat don't go together unless the hat is protected by a veil.

The business girl can't dress like her sister who visits at home, nor should the busy housewifely woman dodge the early morning dress question by slipping on a wrapper. The shirtwaist suit tailored in front in one piece is a blessing even greater than were the shirtwaist and skirt, and it has come to stay. There is no reason for untidiness on one hand and overdressing on the other, for these simple frocks are within the means of almost all of us.

A Bachelor's Diary

ELIZABETH IS TAKEN SERIOUSLY ILL AND HE IS OVERWHELMED WITH GRIEF AND FRIGHT

By MAX

JUNE 29.—It is two weeks ago tonight, Diary, since I came to you with what seemed a trouble then, but which seems only a petty annoyance now.

By greater sorrows we learn to estimate lesser ones at their real size.

I had told Josephine, in a fit of pique, that I was sailing for Europe next day. It was a silly, childish thing, but I said it because she paid no attention to me that evening. I wanted her to know that other avenues of pleasure were open to me; that she didn't bar the gate to every joy life holds.

It was a silly thing to do. A boy of twenty couldn't have been sillier. But I offer no apology. If there are any men who are wiser, let them speak up.

I hate travelling. I knew the news that we were to sail next day would cause consternation in my household, but I gritted my teeth and went to bed, vowing we would leave for Europe next day.

I had a troubled night of it, and was sitting in here next morning waiting for breakfast and feeling like a savage, when Miss Lee came hurriedly into the room. She was pale and distressed, but before I could make any inquiries asked me to please call a doctor and to make arrangements for moving Manette out of the house. Elizabeth, she said, was very sick, and she feared contagion.

I laughed at her. We men have a superior way of laughing at the women and I plead guilty to that weakness in addition to many others.

Really Ill

"You are foolishly alarmed," I said, speaking as one who knows; "I will see Elizabeth."

I went upstairs to the nursery, only to find it deserted. I looked around in amazement. "What new freak is this?" I thought.

"I had Manette moved into Richard's room in the night," she exclaimed, "and Elizabeth is in the south room. It is larger and more remote from the rest of the house."

A little amused that she had assumed such airs of authority, I followed her into the south room. I realized the moment my eyes fell on Elizabeth that her apprehensions had not been groundless.

The child was burning up with fever and though she tried to smile, the effort ended in a little whimper. Her eyes were unnaturally bright, and her little hands were nerveless and so hot I went down stairs three steps at a time and had Dr. Weston on the wire in less time than it takes to write it.

He was there in five minutes. I didn't like the grave manner in which he asked questions, and examined his patient. I didn't like the looks of understanding that passed between him and Miss Lee. I felt as if they considered me an outsider, and when he took Miss Lee to the window and talked to her in low whispers I followed him.

"Look here," I said roughly, "she's my child. I want to know what's the matter with her."

The doctor's only reply was to walk in the hall, and there he told me that Elizabeth had every symptom of scarlet fever in its most serious form.

"I may as well tell you, Max," he said, "that it will be the fight of our lives if we save her."

A Terrible Shock

I confess it took me so completely off my feet I do not know what would have become of us if Miss Lee hadn't assumed charge.

Then we settled down to the fight, Miss Lee as commanding officer, and I as an ignorant, but willing, subordinate, and for two weeks, Diary, we have known neither sleep nor rest. One of us has been with my poor little girl every minute, day or night, and many, many times during my hours on duty Miss Lee has been with me.

This is the first time I have been in this room since Miss Lee called me from it two weeks ago. I am here now because at the most critical moment my courage failed me. The crisis is due. The doctor is up there now. He has been with us every hour he could spare to us. And when he came early this evening and announced that he had come to stay till midnight ("We will know the outcome by then," he said), my nerves failed me, and I came down here and cried like a child.

I have walked the floor. I have tried to read. I have tried to sleep. I have even tried to pray, but nothing availed, and I have come, Diary, at last to you.

The house is strangely quiet. It was never as quiet as this when I lived here alone. I wonder if this strange stillness presages the worst. I wonder how things are upstairs. I wonder if——

Miss Lee is calling me.

CONTRASTING MATERIALS

THE suit in the picture on the left is formed of contrasting materials. The check material, in shades of brown and beige, which forms the skirt of this tailored costume is also used to edge the rolled back revers and cuffs. The jacket is made of smooth cloth.

An attractive walking gown is shown in the centre picture. The three-quarter-length cutaway coat, which is trimmed with piped frills, is carried out in Liberty blue taffetas, which forms a daring contrast to the dull green a long line of glass buttons and buttonholes run from the throat to the hem of the skirt. A deep collar of lace finishes the neck, and a band of the same shade as the skirt completes the sleeves. The hat, simply trimmed with an upright pair of wings and a flat bow, is very attractive.

On the right is an example of a slightly draped skirt for a tailored suit. Seven large pearl buttons decorate the skirt and buttons of varying size are used on the coat.

Hunting a Husband

No. 25—The Artist Disappoints Her, but Her Aged Suitor Brings Her Some News

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER.

ALTHOUGH Beatrice did not expect Sidney Randolph until after eight o'clock, she had finished her light dinner and was dressed and ready to receive him by seven.

She wandered about her pretty drawing-room, surveying critically the pictures and bric-a-brac with which it was adorned, studying them from a new viewpoint, seeking them as she thought the artist might see them.

The light Summer curtains, swaying in the warm breeze, caught her eye and she stared at them with trepidation.

They had been hung only a few weeks ago, and, in spite of the open windows and Boston dust, were still quite clean—or would have appeared so to the casual observer.

But Beatrice noted suddenly that they had lost their pristine starch and freshness. Moreover, Jack had that afternoon leaned from one of the windows to light a fire engine passing in the street below, and in doing this had creased the thin set.

The longer the widow looked at the draperies, the more untidy did they appear to her, until, with sudden decision, she summoned Mary, and, with her assistance, took them down and hung in their place the new ones curtains she had bought that day for her own room.

These were very plain, she regretted, but they were, at all events, exquisitely clean and fresh.

The Maid Surprised

In spite of Beatrice's outward composure, she felt embarrassed by her maid's surprised demeanor.

All women are secretly in dread of the disapproval or secret ridicule of their servants. It has been said that no man is a hero to his valet, and certainly few women are heroines to their maids. So Beatrice was foolishly conscious of the expression of suppressed vexation upon Mary's face, and the girl's remark—"Really, ma'am, them parlor curtains ain't what you could call really dirty a bit"—made the nominal mistress vaguely uncomfortable, as if she had been guilty of some misdemeanor.

But she checked any discussion of the matter by the calm assertion that the new curtains looked far better than the old ones did, and told the maid that she would let her know if she needed her again.

When a few minutes later the doorbell rang, the clatter of china in the kitchen gave evidence that Mary was busy washing the dinner dishes and, probably, not as neat in appearance as Beatrice would wish her to be when she entered in the expected guest, so the widow herself hurried to admit her caller. Her pleasant smile of welcome froze on her lips as she faced a colored man instead of the expected visitor. The negro, in no wise abashed at her change in expression, took off his hat, grinned cheerily, produced a letter which he handed to Mrs. Minor.

"Mister Randolph done sont dis," he remarked by way of explanation, "an' he say dere ain't no answer."

"Very well," replied Beatrice, closing the door.

She did not open the letter until she was seated in the drawing room, for she knew already what the contents would be.

"The things we long for most are often-est denied us," ran the note, "and the arrival of a plutocrat fresh from the Western ranges who is determined to elevate Western ideals by sailing back with him some of my work is, in this case, the messenger of fate to keep me from you this evening. Thus, once, Mercury triumphs over Aphrodite, much to the disappointment and distress of "Your humble servant,

"SIDNEY RANDOLPH."

A Disappointment

A sigh of self-pity escaped the reader as she looked about the softly lighted room and felt that all her work and expectation had gone for nothing. She acknowledged to herself that she was saddened and chastised by having her interview with Randolph suddenly set aside, and that her disappointment was acute.

She sat alone musing, watching the stern sights melt away against the darkening heavens, and was so deeply absorbed in her meditations that she did not hear the door bell ring, and started violently when Mary announced "Mr. Blanchard!"

"I am glad to see you," stammered Beatrice, as her guest entered. Then she stopped short in amazement.

For it was a new "Uncle Henry" who confronted her, a whiskerless, youngish-looking man, in a fresh new suit of gray, with a carnation in his buttonhole.

"Don't recognize me, eh?" he asked with his usual chuckle. "I hope I don't look any worse? It was too hot for whiskers, so I shaved mine off. Now, I feel less like your father when I come to see you."

"The change is very becoming," said Beatrice, truthfully, for she had not known until now what a fine, clear-cut face the old bachelor possessed.

Pleasant Prospects

Her elderly friend chuckled again.

"Tweyl say that anyway," he declared, deprecatingly.

"But when did you get back?" asked his hostess.

"This morning," replied Blanchard. "I went up to Holen's this evening, but found things upset there, so I came on up here."

"Did you have a pleasant trip?"

"Yes, in a way. Maynard—you know him—and I were on the same Pullman going out. I had a good trip from a business standpoint. I'll be a millionaire one of these days—if things keep breaking right," he added, with a laugh.

"How nice!" responded his hostess, vaguely. "But when does Mr. Maynard return?"

"He got back yesterday, I guess," answered Henry Blanchard.

Beatrice did not betray her surprise. "He's a pleasant fellow," she observed carelessly. As she spoke she remembered with relief that Mr. Blanchard had not recognized him as the chief rioter of the roof garden episode.

"Yes," agreed the bachelor, absentmindedly. After which observation he proceeded to give a proxy account of his recent trip.

When he had gone, Beatrice suddenly appreciated that, although this was the day on which Maynard's flowers usually arrived, none had come. Moreover, that he had been in town for twenty-four hours, and had not communicated with her.

"I always thought," she muttered illogically, "that he was fickle."

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

THE VACATION HABIT

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

"I DON'T see," grumbled Lysander John Appleton, helping his daughter on the train, "why you can't be content with putting a cinder in your eye, and staying at home."

But other girls take trips every Summer, and Daysey Mayme has to do as other girls do. The other girls also have to do as other girls do, making an endless chain to father's protests on breakfast.

Daysey Mayme had practiced for her trip by sleeping for three weeks on the pantry shelf. For this reason she awoke refreshed after a night in her berth, and hastened to the dressing room, every muscle trimmed for the fray.

Reaching the dressing room, she hung a skirt on every nail and spread out her toilet articles so that they covered all the available space in front of the mirror.

Other women burst in the door—five, six, seven, nine of them—but Daysey Mayme tightened her straight front and pinned on her back curls with equanimity. They tried to get a peep at the mirror, but she brushed them aside like so many flies.

They struggled to get near the wash bowl, but Daysey Mayme pushed them out of her way to give her finger nails another dip, humming a gay tune all the while.

They grumbled, which prompted Daysey Mayme to experiment with five shades of pink powder on her nose, looking critically in the glass at each effect.

One woman dared remove one of Daysey Mayme's skirts from one of the five hooks. Daysey Mayme shallingly threw the woman's skirt on the floor and replaced her own.

When every curl was in place, every braid pinned on at just the right angle, and she had finished with her powder can and fastened the last hook to her dress, she collected her toilet articles and slowly walked out, leaving seventeen women fuming at the delay.

"Monopoly of the dressing room is one of the ways a woman has for showing she is a great traveler," mused Daysey Mayme.

She was enjoying the reflection that she had demonstrated her experience as a traveler when a motley came along.

"I belong to seventeen research clubs, nine uplift societies and fourteen literary organizations," she mused, "and all this intellectual pursuit has left its mark on my countenance. He will recognize my intellectuality by asking me to buy some very deep textbook," she said, watching him come down the aisle.

The newsboy reached her. He paused. He took a look at her. Then he handed her "Beyond Pardon," by Bertha M. Clay!

Then Daysey Mayme fainted.

"YES." She raised her head. "Six were a dozen others"——

"Madam"——the interruption was made in his kindliest tones, but in a way which nevertheless suggested authority. "Something was picked up from the floor at that moment. If the dozen you mention were witnesses to this act we do not know it. We do know that it did not pass unobserved by you. Am I not correct. Didn't you see a certain person—I will mention no names—stoop and pick up something from the lobby floor?"

"No." The word came out with startling violence. "I was conscious of nothing but the confusion." She was facing him with determination and her eyes were fixed boldly on his face. But her lips quivered, and her cheeks were white, too white now for simple indignation.

"Then I have made a big mistake," apologized the ever-courteous detective. "Will you pardon me? It would have settled a very serious question if it could be found that the object thus picked up was the weapon which killed Miss Chatterer. That is my excuse for the trouble I have given you."

He was not looking at her; he was looking at her hand which rested on the table before which he himself stood. Did the fingers tighten a little and dig into the palm they concealed? He thought so, and was very slow in turning impingly about toward the door. Meanwhile, would she speak? No. The silence was so marked, he felt it an excuse for stealing another glance in her direction. She was not looking his way, but at a door in the partition wall on her right; and the look was one very akin to anxious fear. The next moment he understood it. The door burst open, and a young girl bounded into the room, with the merry cry:

The Knife

"All ready, mother. I'm glad we are going to the Clarendon. I hate hotels where people die almost before your eyes."

What the mother said at this outburst is immaterial. What the detective did is not. Keeping on his way, he reached the door but made no effort to open it widely; rather to close it softly, but with unmistakable decision. The clerk which enveloped the girl was red, and full enough to be called voluminous.

"Who is this?" demanded the girl, her indignant glances flashing from one to the other.

"I don't know," faltered the mother in very evident distress. "He says he has a right to ask us questions and he has been asking questions about—about——"

"Not about me?" laughed the girl, with a toss of her head Mr. Gryce would have corrected in one of his grandchildren. "He can have nothing to say about me." And she began to move about the room in an aimless, half-dressed way.

Mr. Gryce stared hard at the fear remaining beleaguered in the two women, lying in a heap on the table, and half musingly, half deprecatingly, remarked:

"The person who stooped were a long red cloak. Probably you preceded your daughter, Mrs. Watkins."

The lady thus brought to the point made a quick gesture towards the girl who suddenly stood still, and, with a rising color in her cheeks, answered, with some show of resolution on her own part:

"You say your name is Gryce and that you have a right to address me this pointedly on a subject which you evidently regard as serious. That is not exact enough for me. Who are you, sir? What is your business?"

"I think you have guessed it. I am a detective from Headquarters. What I want of you I have already stated. Perhaps this young lady can tell me what you cannot. I shall be pleased if this is so."

"Caroline"—Then the mother broke down. "Show the gentleman what you picked up from the lobby floor last night."

The girl laughed again, loudly and with evident bravado, before she threw the cloak back and showed what she had evidently been holding in her hand from the first, a sharp-pointed, gold-handled paper-cutter.

"It was lying there and I picked it up. I don't see any harm in that."

"You probably meant none. You couldn't have known the part it had just played in the tragic drama," the old detective, looking carefully at the cutter, which he had taken in his hand, but not so carefully that he failed to note that the look of distress was not lifted from the mother's face either by her daughter's words or manner.

"You have washed this?" he asked.

A Puzzling Fact

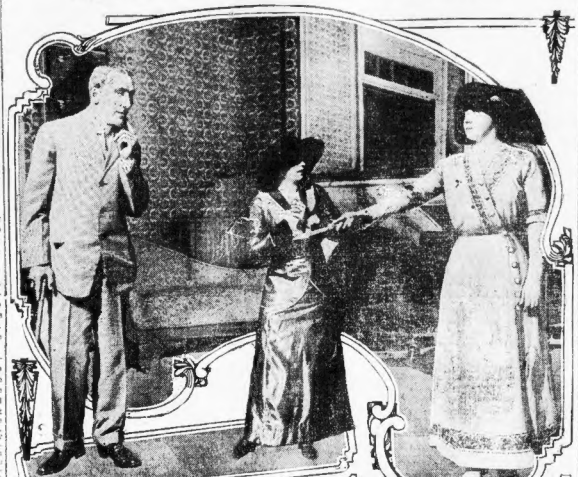
"No. Why should I wash it? It was clean enough. I was just going down to give it in at the desk. I wasn't going to carry it away." And she turned aside to the window and began to hum as though done with the whole matter.

The old detective rubbed his chin, glanced again at the paper-cutter, then at the girl in the window, and lastly at the mother, who had lifted her head again and was facing him bravely.

"It is very important," he observed to the latter, "that your daughter should be correct in her statement as to the condition of this article when she picked it up. Are you sure she did not wash it?"

"I don't think she did. But I'm sure she will tell you the truth about that."

GRYCE TRIUMPHS OVER THE PRETTY KLEPTOMANIAC



The girl laughed and then threw back her cloak, showing in her hand a sharp-pointed gold-plated paper cutter.

Up-to-the-Minute Jokes

"My son is not what you would call card, 'Collar stods,' so I just went in and I collared them."

Clerk—I'm afraid I can't let you have that drug, sir."

Customer—Why not? Do I look like a man who would kill himself?

Clerk—Well, I wouldn't go so far as to say that, sir; but if I looked like you I should be tempted.

Caller—Is your husband in Mrs. Maguire?

Mrs. Maguire—Yis, sor.

Caller—I'd like to see him.

Mrs. Maguire—Ye can't sor. He's up for three months.

Mrs. Mommer—According to this paper, boiled cow's milk is not good for babies.

Mr. Mommer—I can see where the paper is right. A raw cow gives better milk than a boiled one.

He—My darling, you must be mine. I yearn for you every day.

She—That's all right; but what I want to know is will you earn for me every day after we are married?

Caroline, this is a police matter. Any mistake about it may involve us in a world of trouble and keep you from getting back home in time for your coming-out party. Did you—did you wash this cloth when you got upstairs, or—or"—she added, with a prohibitory glance at Mr. Gryce—"give it off at any time between then and now? Don't answer hastily. Be sure. No one can blame you for that act. Any girl, as thoughtless as you might do that."

"Mother, how can I tell what I did? flashed out the girl, wheeling round on her mother still she faced them both. "I don't remember doing a thing to it. I just brought it up."

A thing found like that belongs to the finder. You needn't hold it out towards me like that. I don't want it now; I'm sick of it. Such a lot of talk about a paltry thing which couldn't have cost ten dollars," and she wheeled back.

"It isn't the value," Mr. Gryce could be very patient. "It's the fact that we believe it to have been answerable for Miss Chatterer's death—that is, if there was blood on it when you picked it up."

"Blood!" The girl was facing them again, astonishment suggesting with disgust on her pink not mobile features. "Blood! Is that what you mean? No wonder I hate it. Take it away!" she cried. "Oh, mother, I'll never pick up anything again which doesn't belong to me! Blood!" she repeated in horror, flinging herself into her mother's arms.

Mr. Gryce thought he understood the attraction. Here was a little kleptomaniac whose weakness the mother was struggling to hide. Light was pouring in. He felt his body's weight less on that miserable foot of his.

"Does that frighten you? Are you so affected by the thought of blood?"

"Don't ask me. And I put the thing under my pillow! I thought it was so—so pretty."

"Mrs. Watkins," Mr. Gryce from that moment ignored the daughter, "did you see it there?"

"Yes; but I didn't know where it came from. I had not seen my daughter stoop. I didn't know where she got it until I read that bulletin."

"Never mind that. The question agitating me is whether any stain was left under the pillow. We want to be sure of the connection between this possible weapon and the death by stabbing which we all deplore—if there is a connection. If I didn't see any stain, but you can look for yourself. The bed has been made up, but there was no chance of linen. We expected to remain here; I see no need to be pained by hiding any of the facts now."

"None whatever, madam."

"Come, then. Caroline, sit down and keep quiet. Mr. Gryce believes that your only fault was in not taking this object at once to the desk."

"Yes, that's all," acquiesced the detective, after a short study of the sinking figure and distorted features of the girl.

"You had no idea, I'm sure, where this weapon came from or for what it had been used. That's evident."

No Stain

Her mother, as she seated herself, was very trembling. She was too young to simulate so successfully emotions of this character.

"I'm glad of that," she responded, half fretfully, as Mr. Gryce followed her mother into the adjoining room. "I've had a bad enough time of it without being blamed for what I didn't know and didn't do."

Mr. Gryce laid little stress upon these words, but much upon the look of curiosity she showed in the minute and careful examination he now made of the room. There was no stain on the pillow cover and none on the bureau spread where she might very naturally have laid the cutter down on first coming into her room. The blade was so polished that it must have rubbed off somewhere, either purposely or by accident. Where then, since not here? He asked to see her gloves—the ones she had worn the previous night.

Some Household Hints

When soot or ink falls on a carpet or rug never attempt to sweep it up at once, but cover it thickly with dry salt and let stand a while. It then enables you to clean it up without the slightest stain being left.

Use hot milk, instead of cold, when mashing potatoes and they will be fluffier.

Leather can be cleaned very well with milk. Dust the leather thoroughly with a soft cloth, then use another cloth dipped in sweet milk and the spots will be easily removed.

To brown dishes that cannot be placed in the oven heat a salamander or round iron plate with a handle attached until red hot and pass over the top of the dish, being careful not to scorch.

One often experiences great difficulty in puzzling juice. This may be remedied by placing it in a bowl and pouring boiling water over the citrus. Allow it to remain for a few minutes. You will find it will cut or shave easily after this treatment.

This plan has been a complete success for keeping the juice of berry pies from soaking under the crust: Mix a tablespoonful of flour with the sugar to be used, and the crust will keep crisp and will not become soft or soaked with juice.

A little flour well rubbed into the bristles of hair brushes is an excellent cleansing medium, the brush afterward being well rubbed and shaken over a piece of clean white paper placed over the edge of a table or rill.

A box of cedar-dust should be kept in every kitchen. If any disagreeable smell arises from cooking, put a little of the dust on the hot part of the range, and the escaping gas will purify the air immediately.

If a porcelain baking dish becomes discolored on the inside, fill it with butter-milk and let stand for two or three days. The acid in the milk will remove all semblance of stain.

The Latest Labor Saver

MR. WERDS, after serving a customer with bread, returned to his van.

As he put his basket aboard he noticed a poorly-dressed man standing with one hand on the van-wheel.

"What is it, mister?" he asked.

The man made no reply as he held up his hand, disclosing a match.

"What are you going to do?" asked the puzzled baker, sighing wearily.

The man yawned hard, pulled himself together, and then, with a frightful effort, spoke.

"Soforgat," he said, in a tired voice. "I'm only building this match to put the wheel so that when you start it'll strike."

TESTED RECIPES FOR BEAUTY SEEKERS

WHEN THE HAIR IS "STRINGY"—For "muggy," unruly hair, shampoo with a teaspoonful each of cocoanut oil and a cup hot water. This creates a wealth of rich, penetrating lather that allays irritation and dissolves every atom of dust, dandruff and excess oil. Rinsing leaves the hair and scalp immaculately clean and the hair dries quickly, with an even color, rich gloss and silken fluff. Lustreless, brittle hair particularly good during the heated term, for they overcome that "stickiness" and permit of the hair being arranged in any style.

FOR ROUGH, SHINY SKINS—Put 2 teaspoonfuls glycerin into ½ pint witch hazel or bay rum. Then add 4 drops spermaxs, and you will have a very superior lotion for the skin. This should be used in place of powder, as it imparts a true pink and white shade to the skin and cannot be detected when on. No sticky, greasy skin made by dispelling the oily, sallow condition, and in a few days a soft, velvety skin made of exquisite smoothness. For tan, sunburn and freckles the spermaxs lotion is especially fine.

THIS DISSOLVES FAT—Put 4 ounces parmolx into 1½ pints hot water, and when it cools take a tablespoonful before each meal. This will gradually dissolve the fatty tissues without leaving the skin wrinkled. No harm results from the parmolx treatment, and you feel the weight is where you want it the flesh will not sag. Is dainty.

FOR LONG, CURLY LASHES—With the thumb and forefinger apply some pyrotone at lashroots every night. This eyebrow tonic, curly and silken lashes applied should be rubbed with pyrozin applied with the finger-end. This makes them come in thick and lustrous. Use care not to get any pyrozin where no hair is wanted.

NANCE O'NEIL SEEN IN 'LEAH'

Nance O'Neil gave a wonderful presentation of the Curse Scene in "Leah, the Forsaken," with Lindsay Morrison's stock company at the Majestic last evening, and was compelled to respond to so many curtain calls at the climax that she was exhausted.

And just then, as we were all sitting on edge, thrilled with the dramatic intensity of a tragedy scene, and just as the curtain was finally rung down, the Summer audience all had to laugh as the youth who was intent on selling programs called out:

"ORANGEADE and SARSAPARILLA!"

It put the big crowd who had been appreciating the Belasco star's admirable acting in the merriest of moods for the intermission.

"Leah, the Forsaken," is not a play that produces so many tears as did "Magda," in which Miss O'Neil appeared last week. It is more forceful, and the spectators were silent and spellbound while Miss O'Neil, as Leah, enacted climax after climax to the role of the Jewess, whose ardent and thirst her noble because of a misapprehension, though they loved only each other.

Howell Hansel, as Joseph, the son of the Village Magistrate, was, as usual, strong in his part.

Jane Marbury is very winsome in the part of Lena. The others in the cast, all of whom are deserving of much commendation, include Frederick Murray, The Magistrate; Edward Kennedy, as Nathan; Wyrley Birch, the priest; James B. Barrett, William De Wolfe, William Melville, Frank Houghton, James J. Hayden, Paul Linton, George Raudenbush, Thomas Hagen, Monroe Plott, Edna Oliver, Elizabeth Royal, Florence Doherty, Frances Woodbury, Bella Cairns.

Paragon Park.

The success of May Yohe's first week in the Cabaret at Paragon Park encouraged Manager Dodge that a second week would prove profitable. He was right. Miss Yohe was again the centre of attention at the Palm Garden last evening, and while the other numbers on the bill were as lively as ever, it was plain that Miss Yohe was the big magnet.

Orpheum Theatre.

Although the Summer season gives vaudeville and kindred entertainment an annual setback, the program at the Orpheum Theatre is never passed unnoticed. This week there are several especially attractive novelties on the bill, including, of course, a new list of motion pictures.

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

Weisberg Marcetta and the Hartley Girls were seen in a new programme at the Bowdoin Square Theatre yesterday. There were several other vaudeville features on the bill.

Hub Theatre.

The new program at the Hub Theatre yesterday was made up of refreshing vaudeville, with a good supply of fresh motion pictures.

Amusement Notes.

The Pentocost Inn at Hanover Four Corners is proving a favorite resort for automobile parties. The Inn is only twenty-five miles from Boston on the State road to Plymouth.

The announcement is made that the new St. James Theatre on Washington avenue will open on August 30. Miss Katherine Grey has been engaged to play the feminine leads.

BILL AT KEITH'S SCORES HEAVILY

With two leading vaudeville stars heading the program, Sidney Drew and Kate Elinor, and with seven acts new to Boston theatregoers, the bill presented to the patrons of B. F. Keith's Theatre this week is of exceptional merit.

Sidney Drew and his company presented the farce, "A Model Young Man," written by the late Jacques Futrelle, one of the heroes of the Titanic disaster. Mr. Drew, in portraying Jack Hanley, a model young man, kept the audience in a roar of laughter. The situations which developed when his fiancee called after he had spent a night with the "boys" were full of humor. He was ably assisted by Miss Phyllis Gunkle.

Kate Elinor also needed no introduction to a Boston audience. Her act was called "The Hunter and Hunter-ess," and it goes without saying that the most perpetual grouch would have a hard time sitting in her hearing and sight and not enjoy a laughing fit. Miss Elinor showed that she has lost none of her fun-making ability. She was aided and abetted in her fun-making by Sam Williams.

The other numbers on the bill are all worthy of mention. Ward and Percival, in a hurly-burly tumbling act; the famous Lavine-Cimaron athletic trio, Lawrence and Armstrong, in a singing and dancing act; Halligan and Sykes, "The Comedian and the Fresh Girl"; Grace Redmond, singing sentimental ballads of today and yesterday; Adonis and his clever dog, and the Four Rigoletto strong men, are all good.

Globe Theatre.

An entertaining program was given at the Globe Theatre yesterday. The Lublin quartette, in a real "Down South" scenic singing novelty, headed the list. Zarrell brothers, two finely developed young men, introduced some new athletic tricks, and Mysterious Dooley and the Dooley Company succeeded in mystifying her audience with illusions. The Ted Doner Company rendered a big hit with "The Rag Time Soldier Man," and Don Bateman, the dancing soldier boy, the boys in the Weekly, the song review and many new motion picture subjects completed the bill.

Trips by Boat.

The steamer Dorothy Bradford carried a boat full of passengers to Provincetown yesterday. Everyone reported a good time.

The steamer Lisbe is carrying thousands of tourists to the North Shore every afternoon. The trip yesterday was heavily patronized.

The steamer King Philip makes daily trips to the Indian grounds. Fine shore dinners are served.

The steamer Satellite was crowded with expectant Bohemians yesterday, on its trip to the fishing grounds.

Sight-Seeing Trips.

The Royal Blue Line of automobiles makes daily trips to Plymouth, Duxbury, Plymouth, Lexington and Concord and Nahant.

The Colonial Line of sight-seeing automobiles operates trips to Lexington and Concord, and the trips square twice daily.

Norumbega Park.

Another spirited vaudeville bill was presented in the open air theatre at Norumbega Park yesterday. The Van Ness Troupe of Europeans headed the vaudeville bill with an exhibition of sensational acrobatic work. Another lively feature was supplied by Marie Bennett and her six "picks."

Bass Point.

Both the steamboat lines and the hotels at Bass Point are having a record harvest this season. The resort is so accessible that thousands of pleasure seekers prefer the place to any other on the coast. The sail down the bay is one of the delights of the trip.

Scenic Temple.

New motion pictures and several vaudeville novelties were included in the new programme at the Scenic Temple yesterday. Lenna Howe's orchestra was also on the bill.

Durbar Pictures.

The Durbar in Kinemacolor continues at Tremont Temple. The Durbar pictures are relieved by a special film showing the "Birth of Flowers," a singularly beautiful picture.

Becker Indicted for Rosenthal Case

Great N. Y. Graft Exposure Promised

LIEUTENANT BECKER AND JACK ROSE, WHO CHARGES HIM WITH MURDER.

Lieut. Charles A. Becker, man Rosenthal said was his partner in gambling house.

Jack Rose, gambler, who confesses he engineered killing of Rosenthal at Becker's direction.

GAMBLERS' TESTIMONY SENDS POLICE LIEUTENANT TO TOMBS WITHOUT BAIL.

hours of the night and today, not because it was feared they would escape, but because they were afraid if they were locked in a police headquarters cells they would be killed to silence their tongues.

The story that Rose told of the death planning of Rosenthal, which was corroborated by Webber and Vallon, is almost incredible.

Becker, exposed as a partner in the gambling business he was paid to wipe out, decided, according to the confessions, that Rosenthal must die.

"Kill him and I'll protect you," was the substance of the order it is said he gave first to Rose and then to others.

Down through the upper strata of the high-toned gamblers until they reached the allased gunmen who would take any chance for money the plotters shifted their way. Finally they decided upon four men. It is said, to do the killing. They were:

"Whitey" Lewis, "Lefty" Louie, Harry Horowitz and "Dago Frank" Cirofico. Only the last named has been arrested, so far as known, although there was word at 2pm the Catskills today that Horowitz had been taken. Horowitz is known as "Gyp de Blut," which means "Give the blood."

Becker was indicted at the first night session of a Grand Jury in eighteen years, after Rose, Webber and Vallon had testified. Judge Mulqueen held a night sitting of the Court of General Sessions. Becker, who was arrested at the Bathgate avenue station in the Bronx, whither he had been transferred following the killing, was hurried before the Court. His arrest was on a charge of extortion. Commissioner Waldo suspended him immediately. Meanwhile the Grand Jury was busy, and when the lieutenant came to be arraigned at midnight, it was on the murder charge. He pleaded not guilty.

Why They Confessed.

This is the story of how the men were led to confess as told by James M. Sullivan, counsel for Rose, last night:

"I took up the matter of a confession by Rose with Mr. Whitman early last week, and Friday afternoon, when his case was adjourned again till Monday, I had come to a practical understanding with Mr. Whitman that my client would tell all he knew if promised immunity.

"I recognized that Mr. Whitman wanted to get at the man really responsible for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, and I explained to him the part my client had played and how his testimony would get the murder apparently up to Police Lieutenant Becker.

"Mr. Whitman asked me to give him some time to consider the proposition, and when I went away Friday night it was practically assured that we would come to terms today and that my man would go before the Grand Jury.

"This morning there was a conference of counsel. Mr. Stoppe for Weber, Mr. Chandler for Vallon and myself talked things over in my office and I told the others what I had arranged with Mr. Whitman. Then they decided that it was the only thing they could do to advise their men to throw themselves upon Mr. Whitman's mercy and promise to tell all if granted immunity.

Not Ordinary "Squealer."

"I do not know anything of the arrangements Mr. Stoppe made. He has told me, I believe, for both Webber and Vallon. I only know that my client told all he knew, that he implicated Charles Becker directly in the murder of Rosenthal, and that I feel that a great step was taken in the furtherance of the ends of justice. The thanks of the community are due to Mr. Whitman. I consider, for his able, assistent and unrelenting search after the true criminals in this hideous murder.

"I also want to say that Rose was not a 'squealer' in the ordinary sense of the term. No matter how he he may be, no matter what his crime has been, let it be understood that he held out and refused to enter into any proposition for a confession until the men who should have stuck to him deserted him.

"When he found himself without friends, without money, his family without any of the financial assistance, he decided that he should not be made the 'goat' of this situation, and that those who had brought him into it must suffer their share if they would not help him out of it.

"This has been a most horrible crime, and from the moment I was retained as counsel for Rose, who, it should be explained, was an old friend of mine years ago in Waterbury, Ct., I told Rose that it was his duty to tell all he knew, for if it should be terminated in himself. And now that he has done so, I feel that I have also borne my share of the burden and done what my self-respecting lawyer and citizen ought to do—that is, assist in every way possible the true ends of justice."

Wife Urged Rose to Tell.

For the telling of the murder story, Rose, Webber and Vallon will get immunity. They were called as witnesses and testified before the Grand Jury, which was called in extraordinary session last night to indict Becker.

All night long Rose, Webber and Vallon camped in the office of Hugh Byrne, secretary to District Attorney Whitman. Detectives Leigh and Russo, with Process Server Kling and 20m spark plugs completing them. There was no sleep for Webber, intensely nervous by nature, the man sat in a chair and smoked cigarette after cigarette, alternately weeping, mourning and wiping his forehead with a huge handkerchief and staring vacantly into space. At that he said that it was the first good night's rest he had had in weeks.

"I am glad the whole thing is over. It has been the first good night I have had in many months. I am glad because of myself, and I am glad because my wife wants it," said Webber.

It is known that Mrs. Webber was largely interested in getting the gambler to make a full confession. She is reported to have urged him time after time to come to the front with the full story, and to have urged upon him the fact that he had no business carrying the whole weight of a job he did for others.

"Awful Plight," Says Becker.

Becker passed a sleepless night in cell No. 320 at the Tombs. He said this morning:

"This is an awful plight for an innocent man to be in. I can't say anything more now."

The delicate health of his wife and the expected arrival of an heir to such prospects as the police business promised weighed upon Becker quite as much as the charge against him.

The final man who had jauntily twisted a Panama hat the night before and smiled in the face of a charge of murder in the first degree was broken and tottering.

When Police Commissioner Waldo came to his office at 9:20 o'clock today he was asked:

"Have you any statement to make?"

"Absolutely none," was the reply.

"Don't you think that as head of the police department of New York, in view of what has happened in the last twenty-four hours, it is up to you to say something?"

"I do not."

It has been reported that you will resign from the head of the department as the result of this scandal. Is the report true?"

The commissioner made no reply.

"Jack" Sullivan May Tell All.

"Jack" Sullivan, another of the prisoners under arrest for the Rosenthal murder, held a lengthy conference today with his attorney.

This was taken as an indication that Sullivan, following the lead of Rose, Vallon and Webber, and with the same assurance from the District Attorney that was given to the other three, is prepared to tell all he knows concerning the relations between the police and the gamblers, and the murder of Rosenthal.

Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty replied to a statement by Rose that he feared Dougherty and would not confess in his presence with a denial that he had occupied any friendly relations to Becker in the investigation of the murder. Dougherty said:

"I have never had any supervision over Becker—never came in contact with him or his work at all. It was outside of my jurisdiction.

"When this investigation is finished it will be determined that I never had any relations of any kind with Becker. Everybody in and out of the department knows that I have nothing to do with gambling. In the two places, I arrived at the West Forty-Seventh street police station, forty-five minutes after the actual murder was reported to me, and the case was absolutely dry when I got there.

Ordered Arrests.

"I ordered the arrest of Libby and Shapiro. I received a telephone message from Shapiro that the murder car was hired by Rose and that it went to 'Bridgy' Webber's house. I was the first to develop the name of the two men who rode with Rose. They were Vallon and Schepps.

"I secured the first incriminating statements from every one of the prisoners and it was on my evidence that all the indictments were held in the first place.

"I have co-operated with the district attorney throughout the entire case. Of course, the district attorney could promise and grant immunity where I could not."

Because of fear that they would be murdered if lodged in the Tombs, Rose, Vallon and Webber today appealed to District Attorney Whitman to be sent to another prison. He granted this request and had the trio in the East Side Police Court station. There they will be handy to his office.

"Just Beginning," Says Whitman.

"My investigation is just beginning," said the District Attorney.

"In all probability the end of it will be some time off, but nevertheless I hope and expect that it will end as satisfactorily as has the past.

"I expect to confer with Rose, Vallon and Webber from time to time, hereafter, as they have promised to confer with me whenever I say. They are afraid to go to the Tombs, and I have agreed that they shall not go there.

Policeman William J. Fife, who was in Police Headquarters when Rosenthal was shot, was placed on trial today charged with neglect of duty in that he failed to report Rosenthal's murder and to arrest the person responsible for the murder, and also for failing to report the shooting promptly.

Fife was accompanied to the trial by Mrs. Sadie Sherman, wife of the manager of the Bijou Theatre, in New Haven, Ct., who was one of the party dining with Fife at the time of the shooting. Before the trial Mrs. Sherman said:

"I have come all the way from New Haven of my own account to testify for Mr. Fife because I think an injustice has been done him. I know he is a brave man and that he did his duty."

Stock Market Continues Dull and Neglected

By W. H. ROSS.

STATE STREET, July 30.—Midday.—The Boston market showed no signs of change this morning, opening dull and with fractional declines and advances about balancing it. Speculative interest in copper seemed dormant. They had an uncertain tone, which was attributed to such an anything to the weakness of the metal market in London. During the morning there were slight gains for Nevada Consolidated, North Butte, Butte & Superior and Giroux. Superior was a little lower, as were Lake and American Zinc.

A dispatch from Trenton where Governor Wilson is today to attend to official business signing his nomination acceptance speech will deal chiefly with the tariff.

The New York subtreasury gained $1,804,000 from banks yesterday, making a cash net gain of $3,420,000 since Friday.

New York Opens Dull and Irregular.

The New York market was dull and rather irregular at the opening. The fluctuations in prices were very narrow and there was no sign of any change in the speculative situation. Transactions lacked significance after a few minutes the price tendency grew firmer and there were advances for a number of stocks. It was all professional, however, so far as the public was concerned the market was forlorn. Among issues to advance American Sugar scored the most gain, going up a point. When the improvement took place initial premiums of 1-8@1 were paid for the uniform gains which brought prices to or slightly above the level of yesterday's close.

The Curb was steady at the start.

American shares in the London market were strong but about covering was in evidence there in Canadian Pacific.

Copper Metal and Mining.

The copper metal market was weak in London at the opening, spot being 10s. and futures 10s. 1me.

The London situation caused consumers to hold off on buying, such as immediate needs will admit of, but selling agents declare that there is no cheaper copper in sight, no matter what the length of delivery may be.

In a letter to F. L. Milliken & Co., under the date of July 29, Moffat, Reading & Co., of London describe the European metal situation thus: "The consumption of copper in Europe for the first half of 1912 shows an increase in stocks during the first half of July of 3.22 tons, inclusive of the Japanese and Canadian figures for which visible stocks showed an increase of 942 tons, due to large supplies arriving in July. Under this condition these results proved more satisfactory than we had expected. We are of the opinion that the consumption will show a still further increase for the week more tangible came to hand from Europe. Good orders for copper wire and sheets were reported done in America as prices much lower than the present level. Consumers of copper materials remain very firm attitude and evince little concession. Under the circumstances we do not anticipate any material change in the situation for the remainder of the year. A number of the leading consumers of copper material believe that the present price of copper metal is due to actual demand, and that the present high prices will not be maintained. Quotations ruled flat before the end of the year. Advices from Chile report the output for the month of June as 12,000 tons.

Specials from Houghton state that the Hancock mine has been unwatered to the 1,000-foot level, and that South Lake shaft concrete work is completed to the 1,000-foot.

Calumet & Hecla has declared a dividend of $10 a share, and the Boston & Corbin directors have decided to recommend to the stockholders of Boston & Corbin, Limited, a reduction in the capital stock of the company from £1,000,000 to £500,000, and to issue to the Boston & Superior Copper Company 100,000 shares of Boston & Corbin, Limited, stock, but not antagonistic to the Butte & Superior.

Financial News in Brief.

The Steel trade reports that the United States Steel Corporation, Jones & Laughlin and the Carnegie Steel Company will soon follow the lead of the Republic Iron and Steel Company and increase the wages for steel workers.

Japanese bonds were not at all affected in the London market by the death of the Mikado. Political conditions are such in his kingdom that the passing of the ruler will not affect the foreign governmental changes.

Bethlehem Steel was "dissolved" the old stock was quoted around $625 and now $1,000 is bid for the new. The old stock was $100 par.

Reports from the Southwest indicate that the new to get freight through the Panama Canal to the Pacific coast is the deadest most, was reached by the Southern Pacific Company's steamship Santa Rosa of 5,500 tons displacement, sailing today. Mr. Sproule asked for various concessions, and was refused them.

Boxing to cover short sales is assigned as the reason why National Biscuit touched a higher figure than three of the nearly fifteen points it had declined recently.

The tonnage of the Norfolk & Western was heavy, showing that a big improvement in its net earnings would appear. Nobody who knows anything about the stock has gone to a new high record prices for 1912.

It is said that New York banking interests are averse to any speculative activity in stocks, and that their wish is to be fully prepared for the heavy demands for money which will be made by the crops to move them. Money is easy, and rates therefore not exacted by financiers, while business seems to be at a standstill. The international balance in their favor is small. The International Mercantile Marine Company has been unable to secure the necessary ships to carry the enormous crops which are to be moved this year. The Pennsylvania Railroad has ordered 100,000 cars, and the Baltimore & Ohio 50,000 cars, to handle the crops. The Southern Pacific has ordered 10,000 cars, and the Union Pacific 20,000 cars. The Great Northern has ordered 10,000 cars, and the Northern Pacific 15,000 cars. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul has ordered 20,000 cars, and the Chicago & Northwestern 10,000 cars. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe has ordered 10,000 cars, and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific 10,000 cars. The Illinois Central has ordered 10,000 cars, and the Missouri Pacific 5,000 cars. The Wabash has ordered 5,000 cars, and the Kansas City Southern 5,000 cars. The Texas & Pacific has ordered 5,000 cars, and the Louisville & Nashville 5,000 cars. The Gulf, Mobile & Northern has ordered 5,000 cars, and the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie 5,000 cars. The Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic has ordered 5,000 cars, and the Grand Trunk 5,000 cars. The Canadian Pacific has ordered 5,000 cars, and the Canadian Northern 5,000 cars. The Grand Trunk Pacific has ordered 5,000 cars, and the Canadian Northern 5,000 cars. The Canadian Pacific has ordered 5,000 cars, and the Canadian Northern 5,000 cars. The Grand Trunk Pacific has ordered 5,000 cars, and the Canadian Northern 5,000 cars.

$100 MORE FOR WHITE PARASOL

Keenness! Alertness! Perception!

Mrs. W. J. Loaders of No. 38 Dorset street, Dorchester, evidenced her possession of all three of these faculties last Sunday at Revere Beach by identifying "The Lady with the Green Parasol."

Thousands of AMERICAN readers intent on the search for "The Lady with the Green Parasol" passed and repassed her before she met capture. It seems hard to understand how a woman whose every detail of face and figure is familiar to the public can be at a crowded resort for a time appointed and escape IMMEDIATE recognition. But that's exactly what happened and if $1,000 reward were dependent upon her capture she would probably be the same. And why! Simply because nine out of every ten persons are UNOBSERVANT and the wonderful gift of sight is accepted like most of God's gifts —as a matter of course.

But "it's never too late to begin." Next Sunday is to Revere Beach, and AMERICAN will again test your powers of observation. This time it will be "The Lady with the White Parasol" awaiting identification.

"The Lady with the White Parasol" will stroll on SUNDAY, July 28, Revere Beach, the Beach and the Boulevard, from Loudon's Dance Hall to Revere street, between the hours of 2 and 8 p. m. next Sunday.

The man, woman or child who identifies her will receive from her a Boston AMERICAN watch, handsomely engraved, in gold.

The only requirement is that the person who identifies "The Lady with the White Parasol" keeps his or her hand, IN PLAIN SIGHT, a copy of next Sunday's AMERICAN, and shall say to her: "You are the Lady with the White Parasol."

Examine the picture of "The Lady with the White Parasol" in tomorrow's issue of AMERICAN. Study it carefully—then make your plans now for next Sunday's outing and have a try for the $100 reward.

Not to Destroy, but to Fulfill the Law of Public Service

The Stanley Committee proposes now to destroy the Steel Trust. But the American people have had ample experience of the kind of trust "dissolution" that is recommended in the Stanley report.

The doubling of the market value of oil stocks and tobacco stocks—as a swift sequel to the decrees of "dissolution"—is fresh in the public mind. Such experiences lend themselves, in the first instance, to farce-comedy. But, if persisted in, they might end in tragedy. The patience of the public with that line of procedure is already exhausted. The laugh has died upon the lips of men who have been mocked in their hope—and in their need of relief from gross extortion and injustice.

The majority of the Stanley Committee may be suffering from sincere delusions; but their proposal that the burden of proof shall be laid upon the trusts, to show that their restraints of trade are "reasonable," will sound in the ears of the people like a new and gratuitous mockery. For the actual effect of this provision would be all in the interest of monopoly. It would give a solid, statutory basis to the theory that the "reasonable" or "unreasonable" character of a combination is a matter of legal logic-chopping and incalculable court-construction.

What the country demands is a legislative and administrative control of the trusts—so plain and potent that the courts cannot mistake or weaken it.

Mr. Hearst wrote in an article published in Hearst's Magazine last October:

"There is no solution of the trust problem in the Supreme Court method; and there never will be a solution in any false or fraudulent treatment of the trust problem.

"Trust extortion and oppression enter so intimately into every phase of the life of the people that the people can never be deceived by any protended solution of the trust problem which promises to give them relief and does not actually give them relief.

"The over-wise judges and over-shrewd business men who are trying to deceive the people by this form of trust reorganization are deceiving no one but themselves, and are accomplishing nothing but a continued disturbance of business conditions. * * *

"The return of competition is impractical, and therefore impossible. * * *

"That competition frequently imposes as unnecessary expenses upon the purchaser as upon the producer is shown, for example, in the telephone situation in St. Louis. There are three competing telephone systems in that city, and in order to obtain general communication a subscriber must pay for the rent and installation of all three telephone systems. Such disadvantages are more or less inseparable from competition. * * *

"The Sherman law is not a divine document. It has no direct inspiration from on high. * * * The Sherman law is a distinctly human production, liable to human faults and failings, and peculiarly liable to them because constructed at a time when experience with trusts, and consequently knowledge of trusts, was much less than it is today. * * *

"The United States Steel Corporation is estimated by some authorities to have been capitalized at nearly ten times the value of the individual concerns which compose it. That means that, in order to pay six per cent. dividends, it must realize a profit which would have meant sixty per cent. in dividends to the original enterprises. * * *

"Since the evils of the trust clearly lie in over-capitalization and excessive prices, the remedy clearly lies in GOVERNMENTAL LIMITATION OF CAPITALIZATION AND REGULATION OF EITHER PRICES OR PROFITS.

"This regulation of charges by government is not a revolutionary idea, nor even a radical idea, nor even a new idea. It is in operation in many countries abroad, and in many cases in our own country. * * *

"When any productive business, vitally affecting the life and welfare of the community, becomes sufficiently organized to fix the general market price of its product at any figure, reasonable or unreasonable, it is undoubtedly the right, and will undoubtedly become the duty, of the government to interfere in behalf of the consuming public and to SEE THAT THE PRICE OF THE PRODUCT IS FIXED AT A REASONABLE AND NOT AT AN UNREASONABLE FIGURE."

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

CONGRESS AND THE NAVY

Editor Boston AMERICAN:

The Democratic members of Congress will be traitors to their constituents if they fail to agree to the Senate's amendments to the Navy bill.

The people demand an adequate navy; they pay Congressmen to carry out their wishes. If these Congressmen do not heed the wishes and admonitions of their constituents, and fail to "provide for the common defence" of our country, they should be "recalled," or otherwise removed from office.

Two battleships are really not enough. The other powers are in a fair way to leave us far behind. Actually outstripping us. The wealthiest nation on earth is wont to become fifth in naval power. Even that place cannot be held long if Congress fails to make the necessary appropriation for more battleships each session.

The Panama Canal will be completed for actual use before 1915, according to present indications. The fortification of the entrances will be insufficient to protect the canal in the event of war. Battleships, more battleships, is the crying need.

The two-battleship program will just about replace the old ships as they become ineffective through age and the rapidly changing designs in naval architecture. Five would be more in keeping with our present rank as fifth naval power. England, of course, is still in the lead. Germany, Japan and France are taking their places ahead of us.

The standard of America in every field of endeavor is "second to none." With bumper crops, enormous industries, colossal farms and manufacturing plants, why should we allow this country to be placed in jeopardy for the lack of proper means of defense? There should be no more delay in this vital matter. Every day lost now may mean the loss of thousands of lives and the expenditure of millions of dollars. Better pay a small premium than suffer an irreparable loss. S. W. C.

The Siren of Perpetual Motion

Man Still Longs to Get Something for Nothing, but Only Succeeds in Giving Something and Getting Nothing

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

I HAVE received a letter from an intelligent man who is evidently well educated, except in that which for his present purpose he should have known best of all—the science of physics. He has a lucrative profession, and yet he tells me that he has expended nearly all his hard won money in unsuccessful efforts to perfect a perpetual motion machine. He asks for advice, but it is plain that he would scorn the only advice I could give him, which would be to either throw away his machine at once or else to set it aside until he has mastered the laws of mechanics, after which he would be sure to throw it away without waiting for advice.

Everybody who has the reputation of being a "scientific" soon becomes painfully aware of the multitude of the worshippers of this siren of perpetual motion. They are continually asking for advice—and never taking it. They are like foolish, ignorant little fish that cannot be dissuaded from swallowing a tempting bait, which all who fish have known for generations to be only a deadly lure.

But I shall, perhaps, be asked, as some of these same misled inventors have already asked me, "Why do you, who have said so much to encourage invention, now denounce this particular form of it as impossible?"

I say simply that it is only possible in case the whole basis of existing science can first be overturned. It flies in the face of the great principle of the conservation of energy, which, being interpreted, means that you cannot get something for nothing, and that what you receive, in mechanics, can never be more than the exact equivalent of what you give.

Let us illustrate this by some examples.

When a steam engine runs it uses energy which has been brought to it in another form. In the first place there is the coal which is burned. Millions of years ago, when that coal was in the form of growing plants, it had energy stored up in it. It was energy in the form of chemical combination, exercised through the influence of the sun's rays. The sun had to pay, dollar for dollar, for all that stored energy. The sun's pocket is the pocket for every lump of coal on the earth. We put the coal in a furnace and set it on fire. The locked-up energy is brought out in the form of heat. The heat passes into the water in the boiler and inspires its molecules with increased motion. They vibrate more and more violently until they are torn asunder, and the water is turned into steam. The pressure of the expanding steam acts against the piston, and the wheels of the engine turn. You could not make the engine go by whistling to it, or by making cabalistic signs over it. The one essential thing is to supply it with energy in a form which it can use. You have borrowed that energy directly from the coal, and ultimately from the sun.

When a trolley car speeds along the track it goes by virtue of the electric energy which is flowing through the wire overhead. That energy comes from a great dynamo, which is spinning far away, and the dynamo borrows its energy either from an engine, which takes it from coal burning under a boiler, or from a motor set in motion by water falling from a height. The dynamo turns the energy it receives into an electric current, in order that it may be readily delivered, through a wire, to the place where it is to be utilized. The trolley takes the electric energy from the wire, and delivers it to the motor on the car, and that turns it back again into mechanical energy, which drives the wheels. It is an endless chain of give and take. But there is always a loss in the process. At the end of it you cannot get back all the energy originally stored. It is like the traveller changing his money as he goes from country to country. Every time he changes dollars into francs, and francs into marks, and marks into florins, and florins into liras, and liras into pesetas, the banks take out their commission. But the commissions demanded by human machinery, turning energy into its various forms, are so exorbitant that if the same rates prevailed in money matters the bankers would soon have everything and the public nothing. The best steam engine does not deliver, in the form of work, more than a third of the energy derived from the burning coal.

Now, the idea of the perpetual motion inventor is that they can devise a machine which will cheat nature of its commissions. They expect to set the machine going, and then see it go on forever without supplying it with any energy to keep it in action. There have been such machines which worked for a time, but, invariably, after a while, they fell, and, also invariably, it has been found that while they did work they were obeying the law of the conservation of energy, so that they were not really perpetual motion machines at all. Mr. Pain in his "Seven Follies of Science" has described a number of these devices, about which you might read with profit.

Remember, the principle is simply this: There is a fixed amount of energy available in nature. Probably there is ten times, or a hundred times, as much energy within our reach as we have ever utilized. That is for the future to determine. But, in any case, while we can turn the energies of nature into a multitude of different forms, we cannot add to their sum. If we take with one hand we must give with the other. The capital is invariable, and nature pays no interest.

Now, this principle rests on human experience. No departure from it has ever been observed. Still, a philosopher must admit that we do not know everything, and that even experience may mislead. Our time is very short and our powers are very limited. It is within the range of possibility that there is some other law in nature which we have not discovered, and which, when discovered, will upset our present science. If you believe that you can discover this re-volutionary law, don't undertake the job without first educating yourself in all that is already known, or believed to be known. Then ask somebody's advice, but go ahead.

But, before you begin, get together ten millions, or better, a hundred millions dollars, to pay for your experiments, and to insure yours-if against the danger of impoverishing your family and ending in the poorhouse.

Poets of Present Day Who Enrich Literature

—AND—

The Tendency of Age to Belittle Art and Artists

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

THERE were never so many men and women writing real poetry in the world as in this present era.

Here in America we have a galaxy of poets who would do honor to any age and any land.

Putting all mention of men poets aside (because they do not need our mention), we have Amelie Rives, Anna Hemstead Branch, Elsa Barker, Theodosia Garrison, Sara Teasdale, Josephine Preston Peabody, all doing good work which any poet, dead or alive, might be proud to claim.

And there are others who could be named who have given gems of poetic value to the literature of the era.

Because there are so many, and because everybody reads too much and too rapidly, and because the tendency of the times is to disparage art and artists of this age, these poets have not received their full recognition from the world. It is the same in England.

The literary firmament is shining with poets of rare genius.

Dora Sigerson Shorter is one of these.

Had she lived when periodicals and readers were not so plentiful her work would have made her recognized as a brilliant star in every literary salon. As it is, she had made a place for herself in English literature which cannot be disputed. She made her place as Dora Sigerson, and perhaps she has been shadowed to some extent since her marriage by the strong and compelling personality of her husband, Clement Shorter. Mr. Shorter is one of England's best known men of letters, and his powers of critical analysis are so keen and daring that the very fact of his making Dora Sigerson his wife proves her rightful claim to literary excellence.

I wish I might give, for the benefit of all lovers of romantic verse, as well as all Irish-Americans in our land, many of these delightful lyrics and legends of the Emerald Island, but they are things to be read in a hammock, or before a blazing log on the hearth; to be read leisurely and enjoyed continuously. Here is one extract from the poem called "A Vagrant Heart":

Alas, to be a woman! to be left to pique and pine,
When the winds are out and calling to this vagrant heart of mine.
Whish! it whistles at the windows, and how can I be still?
There! the last leaves of the beech tree go dancing down the hill.
All the boats at anchor they are plunging to be free—
Oh, to be a sailor, and away across the sea!
When the sky is black with thunder, and the sea is white with foam,
The gray gulls whirl up shrieking and seek their rocky home.
Low his boat is lying leeward,
how she runs upon the gale,
As she rises with the billows,
now shakes her dripping sail.
There is danger on the waters
—there is joy where dangers be—Ochone! to be a woman and the nomad's heart in me!

Out of four books rich in poetical charm, it is difficult to select the best for a brief article of this nature, but I will close with one which specially appealed to me, illustrating, as it does in concise poetical form, the mystery of a child's mind and the limitations of a mother's almost limitless power.

AS THE SPARKS FLY UPWARD.

By DORA SIGERSON SHORTER.

The little babe I held upon my knee
Had not yet banished from its sleeping eyes
The dreams of some lost world from which he came,
Nor missed some angel-choired paradise.

Strange little soul that claimed me not his own
By glance or smile, but with no
seeing gaze,
Looked to me who, all timid,
dared to call
This wonder mine and held it in amaze.

I prayed—"When comes the light of consciousness
Of things that be to hold him so he seek
To know what place life now had set him in,
And at whose mercy left, so young and weak.

"Let it be mine, the face he first shall see
Bent on him, full of welcome and of joy,
So that his smile on thus beholding love
The pain of coming years shall half destroy.

"Or if some day he looks to learn, and I Am not beside, oh! let it be the sky
Or some fair thing shall greet his seeing eyes,
So he shall find life good and well begun."

Beside the fire I held him close, and sang
Some sweet child ditty, bidding him to sleep,
And broke the log to make it
flame and glow;
Then in his eyes I saw a wonder creep.

Now peeped the soul from out his startled gaze.
"Look first on me," I cried, "my little child!"
But from my kiss he held his face away
And as the sparks flew up, he saw and smiled.

NEXT Sunday's AMERICAN will be the fourth of the "Governors' Editions," which have established a new mark of attainment in New England journalism.

Governor Aram J. Pothier of Rhode Island, a State small in size but big in achievement, will be the editor. Like the Governors who have preceded him in the editorial chair, Governor Pothier will treat of problems which affect all New England.

Governor John A. Mead of Vermont will be the editor of the last of the "Governors' Editions," which will be issued Sunday, August 11.
